150 Million Deficiency Measure Reported by Committee.

Wagner Proposal Speeded by House

Adjournment Rumored Today; Barkley Sets End Tomorrow.

By Robert C. Albright.

Congress eased down the adjournment runway at a fast glide yesterday, slicing through last-minute knots in tax, sugar and deficiency legislation and otherwise rolling up the session's business in a package for delivery to the President tomorrow.

Without further ado, the Senate passed the $100,000,000 tax loophole plugging bill, and sent it to the House. Hardly pausing for breath, it adopted a conference report on the controversial sugar marketing measure, revised at least partially to meet White House objections.

That left only a $150,000,000 third deficiency bill, and odds and ends of conference reports to run the Senate gantlet. Struggling to keep up with the pace, a Senate appropriations committee approved the deficiency measure, with a rider assuring 1938 cotton crop subsidies.

Housing Conference.

With an unemployment census measure awaiting disposition, the House, after laboring through the Wagner housing measure, was keeping abreast, and leaders were anticipating a week-end take-off. The housing measure was in conference with the Senate last night, one of the last remaining knots untied. An agreement was expected today.

Only the resounding tattoo of Vice President Garner's gavel gave evidence of the usual adjournment haste. Committees and both chambers were taking the legislation in their stride. The normal adjournment scurry and enthusiasm was lacking. The session was just drifting to an anti-climactic finish.

But so swift was the wind-up, that rumors ran rampant that the end would come today. Once again, Senate Majority Leader Alben W. Barkley sought to scotch them.

"What's another day," said Barkley. "I still look for adjournment Saturday.

Barkley added little to that statement after a night conference with the President on the adjournment round-up. He was asked about talk of a November special session of Congress.

"We didn't get that far," he said.

Debate Perfunctory.

The tax loophole plugging bill, which caused a mild flurry when the Senate nearly passed it in 15 minutes Wednesday, snapped to passage yesterday with only perfunctory debate.

Senator H. Styles Bridges, New Hampshire Republican, wanted an inquiry into Federal, local and State tax structures to avoid duplication. Finance Chairman Pat Harrison ad-

Woman Bears Son After She Rescues Baby From Well

Clinton, Ind., Aug. 19 (AP).—Mrs. Glenn McGow, who gave birth to a 6½-pound son six hours after plunging into a well to rescue her 2-year-old daughter, said today she hoped "I will never get that close to so much water again."

Mrs. McGow, 30, is the wife of a relief worker.

The well contained 8 feet of water and Mrs. McGow is 5 feet 2 inches tall, but she didn't hesitate when she saw her daughter, Mary Nell, lose her balance and fall.

She plunged into the well. A son, Charles, 11, threw a rope to his mother, held the other end and screamed for help.

Mrs. McGow, rescued, was hurried to the hospital, where she gave birth to her baby. Mother and child were doing nicely tonight.

"Gone With the Wind," an Editorial—Page 8.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai, (Friday), Aug. 20.—United States authorities early today firmly rejected Japanese and Chinese measures which would impede the evacuation of Americans from Shanghai.

The Japanese navy was notified in effective terms the United States would not agree to restrictions on traffic on the Whangpoo River, Shanghai's highway to the sea. Officials said similar rejection would be given a Chinese notification considered tantamount to demanding withdrawal of foreign naval ships from Shanghai harbor.

American consular and naval officers made it clear they would demand the Whangpoo, by which American have fled Shanghai, be kept entirely open.

This stand was taken as the United States consulate general was informed of the bombing of two American missionary properties in the Shanghai region by Japanese planes, without loss of American life.

Liner Arrives Today.

The evacuation of American women and children from this war-gripped city, in full swing since Monday, was continued today, when 1,000 men, women and children were taken by tender to the Dollar liner President Hoover, just arrived from Manila.

The President Hoover brought a company of United States Marines, doctors and medical supplies.

The tenders ran a gantlet of gun fire from Japanese warships bombing Pootung, across the river from the International Settlement, as they carried the American refugees to the President Hoover.

With the Chinese-Japanese war in the fringes of the city continuing with increased ferocity, food running short and essential services like water and light in danger of suspension, United States officials considered Shanghai increasingly unsafe for their nationals.

Japan's attempt to restrict Whangpoo traffic took the form of a notification from Vice Admiral Kiyoshi Hasegawa, commanding Japanese naval forces here, to foreign officials that the Japanese navy intended to impose limitations on ship movements between Shanghai and Woosung, at the mouth of the river.

Special Dispatch Sent.

United States Consul General Clarence E. Gauss sent back word such restrictions could not be accepted for American shipping. His reply had to be sent by special messenger across the Garden Bridge over Soochow Creek to the Japanese consulate general, this being the only avenue of communication between those parts of the International Settlement held respective-Hand-to-Hand Fighting Menaces 3 Americans in Shanghai Jail.

Nipponese Gain In Hongkew Area

Bring Up Tanks When Tired Marines Waver; 6 Transports Arrive

"Bushido," an Elderman cartoon—Page 8.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai, (Friday) Aug. 20.—Japanese marines fought tenaciously in Shanghai's eastern district early today to keep from being swept into the Whangpoo River by the most impressive Chinese drive of the battle for Shanghai.

The Japanese lines, with masses of Chinese infantry surging against them, swayed back toward the river, but held against the Chinese attempt to thrust a disastrous breach through them.

The attack began late yesterday, apparently in an effort to reach the waterfront and prevent the landing of large new forces arriving from Japan. Before nightfall it had swirled about the Ward road jail, within a few hundred yards of the Whangpoo.

Telephone messages from British warders remaining at their posts in the jail said it was surrounded by the fighting, which had taken on a desperate house-to-house and hand-to-hand character. The whole area was raked by heavy rifle and machine-gun fire.

3 Americans in Jail.

The Ward road jail, chief prison for the International Settlement, has room for some 8,000 prisoners of many nationalities. Three of the present inmates are Americans. An effort late yesterday to move them to a safer place failed when E. L. Faupel, United States marshal for China, and a squad of Settlement police were turned back by the Chinese-Japanese battle.

One of the American prisoners is a woman, described by United States authorities as Mrs. Margaret Florence Evers, formerly of San Francisco, awaiting trial on charges of transporting narcotics.

Warders of the jail, most of whom are British, said every street intersection in that area was a scene of bitter fighting. Grim scenes were enacted in dark alleyways. Much of the fighting was in darkness, heavy clouds having blotted out the moon.

Chinese said their advance had thrust a dangerous breach into the Japanese lines, held for more than a week by marines along the northern fringe of the eastern Japanese-held district of the International Settlement.

Rush Tanks to Front.

[Japanese troops, burning shops and buildings as they advanced, smashed through Chinese lines to the outskirts of the Honkew quarter, giving them almost solid control of the area from North Szechuan road to Yangtzepoo Creek, the United Press reported. A United Press correspondent visited the area and for more than an hour toured the

Alabama Governor Announces Choice After Conference With Resigning Legislator; New Justice Takes Oath Today.

Gov. Bibb Graves of Alabama last night appointed his wife, Dixie Bibb Graves, to serve as ad interim Senator from Alabama in the vacancy created by the simultaneous resignation from the Senate of Hugo L. Black, Roosevelt appointee to the Supreme Court.

Perspiration beading his brow, the round-featured and genial Alabama Governor stepped out of Black's office in the Capitol last night to release two statements: Black's resignation from the Senate and the appointment of the stately First Lady of Alabama to the upper chamber.

Black and Graves had been in consultation for three hours before the final decision was reached and the statements drafted. Only a few hours earlier Black, his thinning hair ruffled as always when he is excited, had stood at the President's desk to receive his own commission as an associate justice of the Supreme Court.

Black Appears Weary.

Black said at the White House he would take the oath of office today; that he could not remember what he had told the President, except, possibly, "Thank you;" and that he was "very tired."

Graves explained his appointment of his wife as follows:

"In order to give the people of Alabama the opportunity to nominate and elect a successor to Senator Black, I have ordered a special election to be held April 26, 1938. Prior to that time a primary election can be arranged.

Only for Interim.

"It is my desire in making an appointment to do so in such manner that it will not give any one candidate for the position any ad-

Wage Bill Foes Block Caucus Of Democrats

House Members Refuse to Attend; Leaders Admit Measure Is Beaten.

By Sidney Olson.

Because at least 50 Southern Democrats loitered in the House corridors last night, chewing cigars and laughing at pleas to go inside the chamber, a House Democratic caucus turned out last night just to be a gathering of "friends of the wages-hours bill."

The "caucus" that wasn't a caucus wrangled for an hour over whether it was a caucus or not; finally decided it wasn't a caucus; and then wrung from four party chieftains a solemn pledge to make wages-hours a "special order of business" for the next session of Congress.

Speaker William B. Bankhead, Majority Leader Sam Rayburn of Texas, Party Whip Patrick Boland of Pennsylvania, and Rules Committee Chairman John O'Connor of New York, separately admitted

Cholera Vaccine for 250,000 Rushed by Plane to Hongkong

First British Refugees From Shanghai Inoculated Before Landing; Port May Be Closed as Dread Plague Spreads Rapidly.

By the Associated Press.

Hongkong, Aug. 19.—Enough vaccine to inoculate 250,000 persons was rushed here tonight by airplane and steamer to combat a cholera epidemic that has caused almost 200 deaths along the South China coast.

The spreading plague created a new peril for thousands of Asiatic, British and other refugees fleeing the war danger in China.

Of 136 reported cases of cholera last week, 82 already have been fatal. The epidemic caused 19 deaths the week before.

The Health Bureau under League of Nations auspices disclosed that 35 cholera victims had died in Macao and 32 in Canton in the week ending last Saturday.

The liner Rajputana, carrying the first British refugees from Shanghai, docked here today in pouring rain to find the city already packed with South China and Formosa refugees and in the grip of a cholera epidemic.

Port May Be Closed.

Because of the epidemic, inoculation of all new arrivals was enforced before landing.

The epidemic threatened to shut the door of the destination of many refugees already on the seas from Shanghai.

Outbreaks of the disease occurred here and on the mainland at Macao, a Portuguese colony, and at Canton, China, up the Pearl River.

Health officers said the number of cases was increasing at an alarming rate and broadcast frantic appeals for anti-cholera vaccine.

The vaccine was shipped from Singapore, British Straits Settlement colony.

Manila Inoculates Refugees.

Manila, Aug. 19 (AP).—Manila opened its homes and offered its hospitality tonight to the first American refugees from war-ravaged Shanghai, but raised precautions against the potential menace of cholera, typhoid and smallpox.

Juvenile Court Bill for District Will Be Shelved

By James D. Secrest.

The District Juvenile Court bill will go over until the next session of Congress, Senate and House conferees decided yesterday.

Senator King, chairman of the Senate District Committee, declared there were so many controversial provisions to be ironed out that it would be impossible to reach an accord before adjournment.

However, the small claims court bill, which had appeared deadlocked, was passed unexpectedly when Senator Lonergan (Democrat), of Connecticut, withdrew his opposition.

Chairman Palmisano of the House District Committee told Senator King he would seek House approval of the bill before adjournment.

The measure, outgrowth of a proposal by Judge Nathan Cayton, will set up a branch of the Munici-

D.C. Lawyer Spends Two Years Renovating Va. Farm, Then Finds It's Not One He Bought

This is a story of mistaken identity that could never have happened in real life, but did.

Villain or hero is Ernest N. Hudgins, of 1717 I street northwest, young Washington and Virginia attorney with "back to the farm" ideas.

Identity mistaken is or was a farm near Chantilly, Va., which Hudgins bought, or thought he bought, in 1935.

It was one of those isolated spots you dream about, a rippling brook, acres overgrown with brush, shapely pines and Virginia creeper, and an old tumbledown farmhouse that had seen better days.

The Hudginses (Mr. and Mrs.) loved it. Browsing through Fairfax County's yellowed records, they traced it right back to the estate of Richard Henry Lee. Mrs. Hudgins did a picture of the old house in oils, while her husband went busily about plans for renovation.

They would salvage the picturesque old chimneys, he decided, and as much of the ancient building as they could. There was some argument about that, but one thing they agreed on—they would remold the old ruins with their own hands into the sort of country retreat we all want to go to—one of these days.

Plans moved into action early this summer. On days off from

McGrady to Quit Soon, Aides Say

Reports revived yesterday that Assistant Secretary of Labor Edward F. McGrady proposes to resign within a few days to become associated with a private business enterprise. McGrady held in abeyance offers made to him last winter because of pending labor controversies. Aides said he did not wish to resign in the midst of the President's battle over the Supreme Court for fear that such action might be misunderstood.

British 'Death Ray' Inventor To Be Ganna Walska's 5th Mate

By the Associated Press

London, Aug. 19.—Harry Grindell-Matthews, genial 57-year-old "death ray" inventor, said today he would marry Ganna Walska, Polish opera singer, whose fourth husband was Harold Fowler McCormick, Chicago harvester magnate.

Grindell-Matthews said his first wife is now Mrs. Archibald White, of New York, the former Olive Moore, of St. Paul.

All he would tell of his matrimonial plans was that he met Mme. Walska about three months ago at the opera, that she now is somewhere in France, and that the marriage will take place shortly.

Mme. Walska is 45.

Grindell-Matthews asserted his secret "ray" could down airplanes, set fire to distant objects and strike death at long range.

He said he had been engaged recently in air defense problems in Wales, but was reticent about details.

U. S. and Brazil Refuse to Modify Stand on Proposal to Lease Six Warships

Joint Statement Viewed as Reply To Argentina

Critics Are Urged to Stop Stirring Discord Over Minor Matters.

By Franklyn Waltman.

In a joint statement which was interpreted as containing a rebuke to governments criticizing the plan the United States and Brazilian governments last night formally announced they would stand pat on their agreement for the leasing of six American decommissioned destroyers to the South American republic.

Not only would they adhere to their agreement, but they have no disposition to modify their understanding in respect to it, the two governments announced. This was taken as an answer to Argentina, which raised a storm of protests against the proposal. The Argentine objections rocked the Pan-American "good neighbor" policy inaugurated in the last few years by President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull.

In effect, the joint statement told Argentina and other governments critical of the plan that they should not spend their time fomenting international controversies over a subject of minor and limited importance at a time when all governments should be concentrating every effort toward the maintenance of world peace.

Action Expected.

Although it is doubtful whether Congress in its closing hours will take any action on a pending resolution authorizing the leasing of the war vessels, the joint statement issued last night at the State Department means that the matter will come up for legislative action next winter.

The joint statement pointed out that for many years the American governments have exchanged military and naval officers for purposes of training and instruction. This form of reciprocal assistance, the statement pointed out, "is today incorporated in the policy of co-operation between all of the American nations."

"The policy and principle involved in the proposal of the Government of the United States to lease at nominal cost to all other American nations alike destroyers already out of commission solely for training purposes are identical. Naturally speculation as to possible interpretations and abuses that could arise can be applicable to any law, principle, policy of government, or international practice."

Not for Combat Use.

The United States and Brazil asserted they were in accord that, "in order to avoid all possible misapprehension, the vessels which might be leased should in no event be employed for combat and should be returned to the United States if at any time the continued use of such vessels by Brazil should prove to be in contravention of the international obligations of either government."

Both governments, the statement explained, held the opinion that this undertaking was "in entire harmony" with United States policy of lending its officers to American republics for instruction purposes and of receiving Latin-American officers for training in vessels of this country's Navy.

"The proposal," the joint statement asserted, "envisaged, of course, merely the offer of a neighborly service to such of the other American nations as might desire it and in this way to promote understanding, friendliness, and mutually beneficial relationships between all of the American nations."

Support Principles.

"The governments of Brazil and of the United States consider that they have played their full part in supporting the principles of the good-neighbor policy since it was initiated and that they have shared in its development and in its increasingly widespread application and therefore the two governments feel all the more concerned for the safeguarding and further expansion of this relationship between the American Republics.

"To that end, while conscious of the absolute soundness of their position in the proposal above referred to, and of the harmony of that proposal with the essential features of the good-neighbor policy as universally recognized, they have nevertheless no disposition to encourage international controversy relative to some entirely minor and temporary phase of that policy.

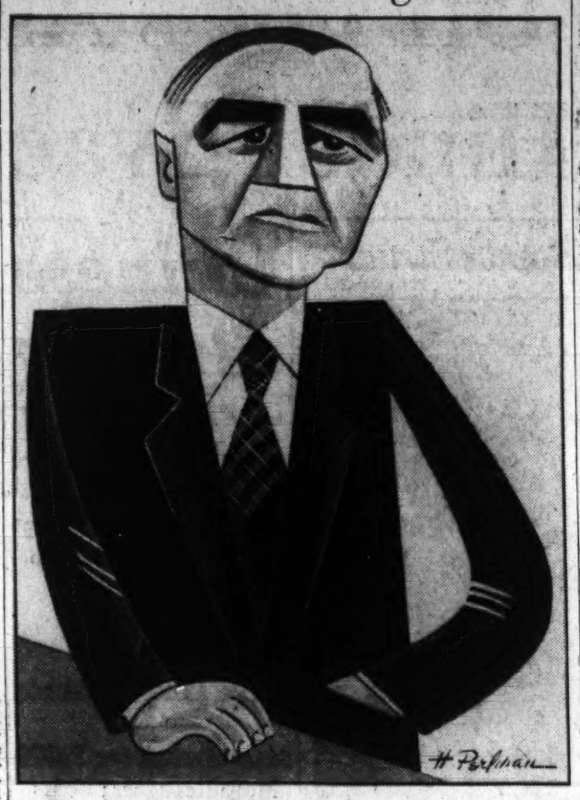

"At this critical moment in international relationships in other parts of the world, they consider that all governments should bend every effort toward the avoidance of the arousing of any form of dispute and should concentrate upon the creation of the foundations indispensable to the existence of world peace. The larger and all-important objectives of the recent Conference for the Maintenance of Peace at Buenos Aires should be uppermost in the minds of all of the American governments and statesmen, and they should not permit themselves to be drawn into discussions about details or proposals of temporary application, no matter how beneficial they believe them to be.

"The governments of Brazil and of the United States are not disposed to enter into any controversy with respect to the pending proposal, nor to modify their understanding with regard to it, and their only regret is that a question of such limited importance should even for a few days be allowed to divert attention from the high ideals and the broad program which the good neighbor policy comprises.

"The efforts of the two governments in behalf of peace among the Americas and in behalf of world peace should be more than sufficient to make it clear to all other countries that they would deprecate the initiation or the pursuance of any policy which could legitimately be considered by the nations of the continent as in any way detrimental to the cause of inter-American friendship and understanding."

New Faces in Congress

Rep. Jarrett 'Is Sick and Tired Of Federal Coddling of Isms'

People Soon Will Demand Return to American Principles, Declares Pennsylvania Republican.

By Liam K. Lenihan.

Gray-haired, 56-year-old Benjamin Jarrett, Republican representative from Pennsylvania's Twentieth District, sees eye to eye with Ogden Mills and Andrew Mellon and the "boys" of the Union League Club. And since he sees eye to eye with them he is "sick and tired" watching the Administration coddle those "foreign elements and isms that would as lief blow our democracy to the moon."

"People are beginning to realize that the Utopia promised them is a mirage and a filmy dream," he said. "Soon they will be demanding an end to this running wild and clamoring for a return to our fundamental American principles. What we want in our Government is horse sense, not brain-trust nonsense."

The lawyer-legislator, who once was a mill hand and telegrapher, strongly opposed the Black-Connery wage-hour bill because "it gives the Federal Government too much leeway into the affairs of private business."

"As a protagonist of private ownership, I strongly resent Government meddling in the affairs of the Nation's business," he said.

Biographical note: Jarrett was born in Sharon, Pa.; was educated in the public schools of Wheatland; studied law as an apprentice in a legal firm and was admitted to the bar in 1907. In 1911 he was elected a member of the Pennsylvania State Senate; served one term and in 1919 was appointed to the Workmen's Compensation Board. After serving four years, he returned to his law practice. He is a member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and of the Flood Control committees of the House.

Hobbies: Fishing and hunting. And what with all this adjournment talk he is "half-way home now."

House Sets Action On Jobless Census

By the Associated Press.

Prospects for a census of the unemployed improved yesterday when Representative Mary T. Norton (Democrat), New Jersey, announced that legislation authorizing the count would be called up for House action before Congress adjourns.

The House Labor Committee, which she heads, formally recommended a Senate-approved bill for the census after amending it along lines favored by President Roosevelt. The alterations would limit the census to unemployed and part-time workers.

After a White House conference, Speaker Bankhead said the President favored a jobless census, but insisted there be no "door-ringing" count of the entire population.

15 Scientists Start Research To Find New Uses for Silver

By the United Press.

Fifteen scientific sleuths set out last night on a "fishing expedition" to find new uses for silver. If successful, the entire silver industry may be revolutionized through increased demands for the white metal.

Under the guidance of the Bureau of Standards, 15 research fellows have been placed in nine different institutions to work on various phases of an assignment which has been officially designated the American Silver Producers' Research Project.

These laboratory workers will use test tubes, Bunsen burners and manufacturing equipment in an effort to build silver into a more important place in American life.

They will see what the effect of adding silver has on certain common metals; possibly the addition of silver will make them better. They will test the effects of silver ring inserts in bearing metals. They will try to use silver for soldering.

Study Many Angles.

"As the result of interviews with those in charge of various research organizations, many different viewpoints have been considered," said an announcement from the bureau. "It has been decided to follow up each suggestion thus obtained, as well as those offered by members of the technical advisory committee representing the sponsors, insofar as practicable . . .

"The schedule includes studies of argyria, bactericidal properties, chemical properties, fungicidal properties, physio-chemical properties, electroplating, electrical characteristics, thermal properties and metallurgical possibilities."

Since the field of metallurgy at present appears to be the most promising for new uses capable of absorbing a considerable part of the annual silver production, 7 of the 15 research fellows have been assigned to these problems. Three of these metallurgists have been assigned to the Bureau of Standards.

Dornblatt Co-ordinator.

A. J. Dornblatt, formerly head of the metallurgy and chemistry section of the United States Naval Academy post-graduate school, will act as co-ordinating officer for the project. It was announced a considerable portion of his time will be spent in contacting industrial leaders so that commercial concerns may be interested in the project and to insure that it does not duplicate work being carried forward in industrial laboratories.

Dornblatt will be assisted by A. M. Setapen, formerly teaching assistant in the graduate school of Carnegie Institute of Technology.

Wage Bill Foes Block Caucus Of Democrats

House Members Refuse to Attend; Leaders Admit Measure Beaten.

the wages-hours bill was dead for this session—strangled in the Rules Committee by a coalition of five Southern Democrats and four Republicans—and then promised to force a bill to the floor at the next session, whether it comes this fall or in January.

Scene Unprecedented.

The scene was unprecedented in House history. The caucus—in order to be a caucus—needed 165 members present, a bare majority of the 328 Democrats in the lower chamber.

But only 157 answered the roll call. At least a dozen opponents of the bill, present in the chamber, refused to answer their names, and outside, in the lobbies and the halls, several score members, laughing and chatting, talked of fishing trips next week.

The failure to get action on the bill was considered a repudiation of John L. Lewis, chairman of the Committee for Industrial Organization, who strolled through the House lobby yesterday, speaking to many members, and urging action on the bill this session.

Roll Called Twice.

Twice Caucus Chairman Robert L. Doughton, of North Carolina, had the roll called. Twice the proponents failed to get a quorum. Then the session got hot. At least 20 members shouted, screamed and banged desks to get recognition. Chairman Doughton's strong right arm grew weary with gavel pounding as the members argued hotly in the aisles.

Throughout the hubbub rang the sharp voice of Representative John Rankin, of Mississippi, opponent of the bill, saying: "Point of order—no quorum present—the meeting must adjourn automatically."

As one member described the scene, Rayburn finally secured recognition and the House stilled to hear their leader. Just as he began to speak, Rankin shrilled again: "Point of order—no quorum!" The members booed lustily. As Rayburn attempted to continue, Rankin intercepted with the same cry, and this time there were angry shouts of "Get the hell out of here, John!"

Don't Need Quorum.

Then Rayburn spoke, saying words to this effect, as jotted down by the member:

"We don't need a quorum, or a caucus, or the 30 members in the cloakroom to carry out our platform pledges for wages-hours legislation. We must decide whether the Rules Committeme can block the will of the House majority. I exonerate the Rules Committee's great chairman (O'Connor) from that criticism, and I believe I may be exonerated:" (Cries of "You are; Sam! You are!") "Next session whether it be a special or regular session, if this jam in the Rules Committee persists, I, for the first time in my life, will be the first signer of a petition to discharge that committee. The Democrats are three to one for this bill."

After the meeting closed, Representative Arthur Healey, of Massachusetts, issued a statement saying that "a great moral victory has been won. We have largely achieved our aims, since the leadership is now pledged to work unceasingly for enactment of this bill."

But down on the House floor, after the reporters were finally allowed inside, Representative Maury Maverick, of Texas, leader of the liberal bloc in the House, was furious. He bellowed:

"I'm sick and disgusted with the whole situation. This party is pledged to this great reform. I'm not going back to my section and brag about the Democratic party. I'm sick and tired of the whole Democratic party."

Friends Protest.

His liberal follows, Jerry Voorhis, of California, Phillips, of Connecticut, and others, interjected swiftly.

"No, Maury! Don't say that!" Somebody suggested he say instead "a stubborn minority" of the party. He said that, and more, adding: "I don't know what's going on when 330 Democrats let four guys on the Rules Committee keep them from voting for a bill for the welfare of the whole country!"

"We've got to change the rules of this House the first thing next session. We've gagged ourselves down now so that we can't do a thing!" One of the group added:

"Yes, and there's a reactionary Southerner at the head of every committee, too!" They all nodded.

Meanwhile the Senate's sudden passage of the Wheeler-Johnson bill banning child labor brought forth the possibility that House action might follow today under a move to suspend the rules and pass the bill. This would require a two-thirds majority, however.

Heir to Dutch Throne Expected in December

The Hague, the Netherlands, Aug. 19 (AP).—Authoritative sources reported tonight the birth of an heir presumptive to the throne of the Netherlands is expected in mid-December. Crown Princess Juliana herself indicated in a broadcast early this summer she was expecting the birth of a child. She married Prince Bernhard zu Lippe-Biesterfeld last January 7.

vantage in going before the people to present his candidacy.

"In appointing to fill this vacancy it should be clearly known by the people that the person appointed by me will fill the position only until the Democratic Party in Alabama can nominate a Democratic candidate.

"Immediately upon the selection of a Democratic candidate by the Democrats of Alabama, that nominee will be made the Senator from Alabama to fill the unexpired term of Senator Black. In my judgment, Dixie Bibb Graves is in all respects the best fitted to serve in this ad interim appointment and to carry out the policies above mentioned. I am therefore appointing her Senator from Alabama to fill this position until the Democrats of Alabama shall select their Senator.'

Mrs. Graves, third Southern woman in recent years to become a Senator through a vacancy appointment, probably will be sworn in today, it was said, the day before the present Congressional session will expire. Mrs. Hattie Caraway, of Arkansas, the only woman now in the Senate, or Senator John H. Bankhead, of Alabama, will escort her to the well of the Senate.

Glass Calls This an 11-Figure Congress When Spending Total Reaches $9,400,000,000.

AN ELEVEN-FIGURE Congress, as expenditures go, was the label Senator Glass, of Virginia, figuratively applied to his colleagues yesterday. By the time it quits for 1937, this Congress will have appropriated nearly $9,400,000,000, Glass estimated yesterday.

He produced figures indicating the outlays will be approximately $1,290,000,000 more than in 1936, excluding the $2,237,000,000 bonus payment of that year.

Counting the bonus appropriation in the total for last year, Glass' figures showed, the amount appropriated this year would be $946,910,379.59 less than in 1936.

A Senate committee estimate said this year's total would be approximately $196,131,016 less than the President's budget estimates.

But Glass reported that, since part of the reduction below estimates was affected by apportionment of unexpended balances, the net cut was actually $85,600,000.

MEMBERS OF THE SENATE Military Affairs Committee predicted Roosevelt will veto legislation to extend bonus and retirement benefits to persons who served as provisional officers during the World War.

The bill was sent to the White House Wednesday.

Committee members recalled that the President vetoed a similar measure last year. The Veterans' Administration and the War and Navy departments have opposed the bill's passage on grounds that it conflicted with the President's economy program.

Chairman Sheppard (Democrat), Texas, of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, estimated the legislation would cost about $3,202,000 in bonus payments and $10,000 annually in retirement payments.

SIX-TOED INDIANS are out, artistically, said Senator Clark, of Missouri.

He voted to authorize the purchase of a $35,000 canvas depicting the signing of the Constitution, to be hung in a Capitol corridor, but warned his colleagues:

"We better exercise more discrimination than Congress has used in purchasing some pictures in the past. I notice that one painting in the Capitol is so carelessly done that it shows an Indian with six toes."

The picture he referred to was purchased more than 50 years ago.

A NEW HOUSING MEASURE designed to better conditions for apartment renters was offered by Senator Wagner. Officials said the measure would expand authority of the Federal Housing Administration to insure mortgages on big-scale apartment projects undertaken by corporations.

The dividends of these corporations would be limited, and the FHA would have a voice in fixing rents. In addition, it was said, the new measure would permit mortgage insurance on small apartment houses built by individuals. This insurance would be granted in the same manner that the FHA now insures mortgages on private homes.

Officials said the legislation would round out the Administration's housing program. Federal aid for slum clearance and low cost housing is provided in the Wagner bill which already has passed both Houses and now is under study in a Senate-House conference committee.

A bill meanwhile was introduced in the House by Representative Frank Hancock, North Carolina, and in the Senate by Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin, designed to stimulate private activity in the field of low-cost-rental housing construction.

Offered first as amendments to the national housing act, when the Wagner housing bill was before the House, the Hancock proposals were declared not germane. Hancock and La Follette moved yesterday through separate legislation to facilitate private financing of multi-family housing projects for low-income groups by extending the Federal insurance provisions.

Man, 60, Dying, Memory Gone After 41-Day Fast to Save Money for Family

Food Cravings MaddenedHim, Diary Relates

'Courage Very Weak' in 3 Weeks; 'Awful, Awful, Awful, This Hunger.'

By the United Press.

Oklahoma City, Aug. 19.—Sixty-year-old George Jones, whose diary told of 41 days of starvation while he saved money to send to his family, recovered consciousness today in a hospital, but his memory was blank. Physicians said he had little hope of recovery.

The elderly man collapsed in a downtown building today. Police moved him to a hospital, and within his shirt found an unusual diary of 41 days of hunger.

The diary was started on July 9, and on that day he wrote:

"Dear wife: It seems I have reached the end of the row. I can suffer no longer. Sunrise and sunset, both are the same. I would sleep, but I have no bed. The money I get I will send to you. Today I decided to stop eating and shall let Nature run her course.

"July 10—Pretty hungry; today I weigh 149 pounds."

On July 17, he wrote:

"I thought the desire to eat would have left me before now. I'm so hungry."

"July 21—That intense desire to eat is not so strong. I believe I will soon be at rest in my body.

"Aug. 1—My courage is very weak. I look so longingly at food.

"Aug. 5—Awful, awful, awful . . . this hunger.

"Aug. 7—Thirty days have I fasted. I have saved $15 I can send to the folks. Can't remember where, but I have the money for them. I must remember where.

"Aug. 15—I watched people eat today. Strange, but it did no longer make me wild.

"Aug. 17—And He was 40 days and 40 nights without anything to eat and afterward hungered. I think so. I am amazed that after 40 days and 40 nights with nothing but water that I am able to be up and around.

"Aug. 18—I am so weak . . ."

Election of officers and a trip to historic sites in Washington and vicinity will be the high lights of the closing session today.

Smithsonian Archeology Curator Gained Many Valuable Secrets Trading Plumage With Braves; Order Ready for Priest.

If some of your friends come back from the untamed West this autumn with a bunch of eagle feathers bought directly from the Indians, just be a good neighbor and pretend you never saw the feathers before.

The odds are that you have, however—sometime when you visited at the Washington Zoo. Every little or big eagle feather that falls at the Zoo goes straight back to the Indians.

Neil M. Judd, curator of archeology at the Smithsonian Institution, realized the value this trading back would be when he began some work in New Mexico in 1921. He asked the Zoo to save all the feathers for him, and it is to be doubted that anyone ever got better co-operation from the Indians.

Information, secrets, rare pottery and frienship may be given in return. "Usually, it is merely a gesture of friendship. A young Indian who has helped me considerably and is now a priest asked me for the next ones. He wanted parrot and macaw feathers, too, to be used in his ceremonials," Judd said.

The Zoo has 200 eagle feathers and some parrot and macaws ready for him; so he can send his package off to New Mexico almost any time now.

There never are enough eagle feathers to go around among the Indians who want them. Often during the tourist season, Judd said, other feathers are dyed and passed off as having belonged to the big sky monarch.

The Zuni Indians keep eagles in captivity and pluck their feathers as needed, while the Hopis often capture and kill the birds for their plumage. The killing is done without shedding blood, usually by pressing on the thorax, Mr. Judd said.

Not all tribes value the eagle's feathers above others. The Pueblos value turkey feathers highest and keep them domesticated to have a constant supply. Many of the Southwest clans place the highest value on parrot and macaw fathers.

In pre-Spanish days the Indians traded valuable turquoises for the colorful macaw and parrot plumage, lead to tales of the "seven first cities" that in turn caused the first Spanish explorations into the Southwest in 1539.

With exception of parrots and macaws, only native birds are usually respected by the Indians. If someone should give some of the tribes ostrich feathers, for instance, the gift would create no friendship, but only pity at such ignorance.

Breast feathers of the agle are valued almost as much as tail feathers. They are often used on prayer sticks or may be caught into the top of a skull cap made of lion's skin.

The Zoo saves peacock tail feathers, too, because someone is always wanting to study that colorful design and the officials like to have a real feather handy to give such individuals.

Her Skull and Arm Fractured in Fall

Three-year-old Shirley Purks, daughter of Gardner Purks of 1320 Twelfth street northwest, is in a critical condition at Children's Hospital, where she was taken yesterday after a neighbor found her lying unconscious on the sidewalk near her home. A broken arm, fractured skull and possible concussion of the brain resulted from a fall down the stone steps of the house next door, police believe.

No one witnessed the accident. Police have rejected the theory Shirley was the victim of a hit-and-run driver.

Nijinsky, Insane 20 Years, Is Reported Near Recovery

Copyright, 1937, by the United Press.

Kreuzlingen, Switzerland, Aug. 19.—Vaslav Nijinsky, the greatest ballet dancer the world ever knew and once called "the man of whom the birds are jealous," is emerging from his insanity after 20 years in a madhouse, his wife said tonight.

Mme. Romola Nijinsky, who followed Nijinsky around the world beseeching him to marry her, said her 47-year-old husband has responded to the dancing of their daughter, Kyra and is groping his way out of the haze of his malady.

"He may leave his sanitarium and return to social life," the Hungarian-born Mme. Nijinsky said, "but he never will dance again. It would be too strenuous. He could never stand it."

The Polish dancer, whose feet are grotesquely shaped like those of a bird because—according to specialists—of atavism in the fifth generation of a dancing family, was said to be showing steady improvement under Dr. Emile Binswanger.

Plans Insulin Use.

The Viennese specialist, Prof. Sackel, who developed the use of insulin therapeutics in treating certain forms of insanity, recently examined Nijinsky and is to begin treating him within a few days.

Despite Mme. Nijinsky's enthusiasm, several Swiss specialists warned against "exaggerated expectations," referring to the fact that two of Nijinsky's brothers suffered from insanity.

"We do not like to talk much about Nijinsky's health and progress," his wife said, "but we are hopeful.

"Yesterday Kyra danced before him—one of his own dances that delighted thousands all over the world—and he showed himself to be quite enjoyed.

"I played several of his compositions on the piano, including his famous Etruschka. He danced his part—of course, not quite like he used to, but he made the right steps. We were astonished at his performance."

For years after insanity fogged his brain, Nijinsky refused to dance, even stared bewilderedly at anyone who danced before him.

Has Weird Paintings.

The dancer, who took up autosuggestion in 1917 in an effort to persuade himself that he actually was the faun he portrayed in his famous dance, "L'Apres Midi D'Un Faun," still is surrounded in his sanitarium room by weird and fantastic paintings of unearthly things.

He has gone in heavily for painting and drawing in recent years, drawing strange butterflies, distorted masks and faces with bulbous, hideous eyes.

Prof. Sigmund Freud said they showed "remarkable genius."

Nijinsky, whose "web feet" enabled him to leap across the stage with a single bound and to descend from a leap slower than he rose, knows that his mind is clouded.

When Diaghileff, his former famous impresario who is accused by Mme. Nijinsky in her widely read book of "mentally poisoning" her husband, begged him to pull himself together and dance again, Nijinsky shrugged his shoulders and said:

"Je ne peux pas, car je suis fou." (I cannot, for I am crazy).

Weirton Drive Led to Beating, Union Men Say

Effort to Organize 12,000 Workers Put Two Men in Hospital.

By the Associated Press

New Cumberland, W. Va., Aug. 19. Two organizers of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee testified today they were beaten and spent several days in a hospital because they tried to organize the 12,000 mill workers of Weirton Steel Co.

They told their stories before 300 steel workers who packed Hancock County Courthouse for the National Labor Relations Board's hearing on its complaint that the company intimidated its workers.

Paul Rusen, a sub-regional director of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, and Richard Riser, of Steubenville, his assistant and a former Weirton employe, said they were beaten last year shortly after John L. Lewis' Committee for Industrial Organization formed the S. W. O. C. to organize the steel industry.

Violence Ignored.

Gadsden, Ala., Aug. 19 (AP).—Members of the United Rubber Workers of America testified at a National Labor Relations Board hearing today a foreman of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.'s Gadsden plant stood by last year as workers were beaten in the plant.

The hearing is on a complaint which charges the company with "acts of terrorism" against United Rubber Workers.

Outburst Stops Hearing.

Chicago, Aug. 19 (AP).—An outburst of angry bickering interrupted the National Labor Relation's Board hearing on charges against the Inland Steel Co. today.

Amid shouting and fist waving, Frederick Burnham, an Inland attorney, accused Examiner Charles A. Wood of making the record one-sided and Wood contended false statements had been made.

Wood is presiding at the inquiry into the contention of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, a C. I. O. affiliate, that the Inland firm violated the Wagner labor relations act by refusing to negotiate a signed contract.

Rebels Routed, Retreat 3 Miles In Fierce Battle

Santander Road Becomes 'Canal of Dead' in Drive on Italian Forces.

By the United Press.

Madrid, Aug. 19.—The highway between Santander and Reinosa became a "canal of corpses" tonight after a fierce loyalist counter assault that drove Gen. Francisco Franco's encircling rebels back nearly 3 miles, dispatches from the northern front said.

Franco's advance up the highway, led by a fleet of Italian tanks and troops of Italian "black arrows," was said to have been demoralized by the surprise assault.

Tonight, it was reported, the rebels had been forced back as far as Rubiabaja, 38 miles southwest of Santander.

Hendaye, France (Spanish border), Aug. 19 (AP).—Italy's black arrow division pushed through rolling Biscayan hill lands toward the coast and Santander today under the eyes of Generalissimo Francisco Franco himself.

Body of Iceman, Parted From Kin, Found in Canal

The body of John Francis Keady, 36, was discovered yesterday floating in the old Chesapeake & Ohio Canal near the Wisconsin avenue bridge. After an autopsy Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a statement of accidental drowning.

Harry Ready, a friend of Keady, told police he saw him alive at 7 p. m. Wednesday. He did not know where the victim lived.

His estranged wife, Mrs. Margaret Keady, said she has seen little of her husband since their separation seven years ago. They have two children, Betty Jane, 10, and Kathleen, 8.

She believes her husband, formerly employed as an ice man was out of work. Although he had given his address as Vienna, Va., when answering police charges, she thinks he never lived outside Washington.

The body was discovered by Frederick Young, 2406 Pennsylvania avenue, and William Sullivan, 1062 Jefferson street northwest.

Keady is survived by two brothers, Harold and Charles Keady, of Washington, and two sisters, Mrs. Herman Groves, of Alexandria, Va., and Mrs. Mary Martin, of Warrenton, Va.

Meehan Expelled From Stock Marts

By the Associated Press.

The Securities Commission gave Michael J. Meehan, recently found guilty of stock manipulation, two months yesterday to wind up his affairs before being expelled from the New York stock and curb exchanges and the Chicago Board of Trade.

The commission issued a formal expulsion order, effective October 19, in accordance with its recent opinion finding Meehan had manipulated Bellanca stock in violation of the securities exchange act of 1934.

The order established a precedent by expelling Meehan directly instead of ordering the exchanges to carry out the sentence.

Hurley to Request Ban On WPA Guide Book

Boston, Aug. 19 (AP).—Gov. Charles F. Hurley declared thonight he would ask that further printing of a Massachusetts guide book, prepared as a Works Progress Administration project, be held up pending a full review by the State librarian.

A mounting tide of criticism by State and municipal officials greeted the newly published 675-page illustrated work. Chief points of criticism was treatment of the famous Sacco-Vanzetti case. The case history drew 41 lines, compared with only 9 for the Boston Tea Party.

Britain Asks U. S. Support to Remove Belligerents From Shanghai

France Agrees To Tri-Power Neutral Zone

Plan Will Be Given to China and Japan if America Concurs.

By the Associated Press.

London, Aug. 19.—London and Paris looked to Washington tonight for a solid tripower occidental front supporting Britain's plan to establish a neutral zone in embattled Shanghai.

The three nations, with Japan, are the controlling powers in international Shanghai. France already has signified acceptance of the scheme, which was transmitted yesterday by London to Washington, Tokyo and Nanking.

It was understood the plan proposed complete withdrawal of Japanese land and naval forces from Shanghai and evacuation by Chinese troops of a neutral zone.

Japan, however, today was understood to have made withdrawal of Chinese forces from Shanghai first consideration in Great Britain's proposal for a neutral zone in the city of conflict, it was said in Tokyo.

Unless the Chinese withdrew, Kensuke Horinouchi, vice minister for foreign affairs, was reported to have informed the British charge d'affaires, J. L. Dodds, the Japanese government believes the protection of Japanese lives and property is impossible except by the presence of Japanese troops.

He was understood to have said this view prevailed even though it involved armed conflict.

Responsibility would have to be accepted by the powers concerned, especially the United States, before Britain would take the lead in actually proposing it, informed sources indicated.

Neutrality Invocation Urged.

By the United Press.

Twenty-four members of the House yesterday joined with the National Council for the Prevention of War in urging President Roosevelt to invoke the neutrality act in the Sino-Japanese conflict and suggesting that Congress remain in session until the crisis is over.

Chinese Ambassador C. T. Wang issued a statement charging Japan with sole responsibility for the "slaughtering" of civilians in Shanghai. He appealed to the moral judgment of the United States to consider the "wanton destruction" occurring there.

The Navy Department canceled authority for travel of Navy dependents (families of officers and enlisted men) to Asiatic stations.

Frederick J. Libby, executive secretary of the National Council for the Prevention of War, wrote President Roosevelt, protesting against delay in applying the neutrality act.

State Department attaches said last night the United States is giving close consideration to Great Britain's proposal to establish a neutral zone in Shanghai.

Earthquake Adds Its Horrors After War Batters Hopei

By Earl Lief,
United Press Correspondent.

Tehchow, Hopei Province, China, Aug. 19.—I reached this bomb-pitted city in southern Hopei today just in time to be caught in the last of a series of earthquakes which has added to the horror of the Chinese-Japanese war in this sector.

Hundreds of persons have been killed by the earth tremors, which were followed by floods in the valley of the turgid Yellow River.

I reached Chinese military headquarters after a hazardous journey from Tsingtao, chief seaport of this province, to find that Gen. Han Fuchu had diverted many of his troops from war against the Japanese to a war against the elements.

The whole district between Tsinanfu, the Shantung capital, and Tehchow is devastated.

It was impossible to obtain any estimate of the casualties.

Japanese Mill Hands Occupy Royal Suites

Shanghai, Aug. 19 (AP).—The strange tides of war today swept 400 Japanese cotton mill hands into magnificence undreamed.

Suites formerly occupied by Oriental and European royalty at Shanghai's oldest and most famous hotel, the Astor House, were turned over to 50-cents-a-day workers.

With the military occupation of the International Settlement north of Soochow Creek, the Japanese authorities requisitioned the Astor House for refugees.

Chef Jean Mores, of the Raleigh Hotel, returns these peace doves, once symbols of harmony at a recent Democratic peace feast, to the blue sky, whence they came. For a while it was thought the doves (really white pigeons) might end up ingloriously in a pie. They had been unpaying guests at the Raleigh since the Democratic Senatorial dinner August 10.

Britain to Protest Tokyo Occupation

London, Aug. 19 (U.P.).—The foreign office announced tonight Great Britain would formally protest to Japan against Japanese occupation of British buildings in Shanghai and will demand compensation for the owners.

The idemnity will include rent and damages for deterioration during occupancy and any loss sustained by occupants and owners because of the seizure.

1,000 U. S. Koreans Will Join Chiang

New York, Aug. 19 (AP).—Pu Jogam, Korean writer, said tonight thousands of his countrymen in the United States, Mexico, Cuba, and the Hawaiian Islands have been ordered to join the army of Gen. Chiang Kai-shek to fight against Japan. Nearly 1,000 Koreans in New York, San Francisco, and other cities are affected, he said, and many plan to depart immediately.

Soviet Closing Two Consulates In Manchukuo

Protests 'Difficulties' and Assails Tokyo Envoy for Propaganda.

By the United Press.

Moscow, Friday, Aug. 20.—The government today announced it is closing two important consulates in Manchukuo as a protest "against difficulties created by Japanese-Manchukuoan authorities to render normal functioning impossible."

The consulates are at Pogranichaya and Sakhalin.

Meanwhile, Pravda, Communist Party newspaper, attacked Japanese Ambassador Mamoru Shigemitsu for alleged efforts to spread propaganda among foreign correspondents.

The newspaper said that on August 16 the Japanese embassy delivered typewritten English circulars to all correspondents, giving the Japanese version of the Tientsin raid on the Soviet consulate August 1.

The version differed from the Soviet story. Japan said the attack was caused by White Russians (exiles), while the Soviet government accused Japanese troops of instigating the trouble. The Tientsin consulate was wrecked and documents were carried off.

China 'Education' Drive Caused War, Say Tokyo Chiefs

Chicago, Aug. 19 (AP).—Seven members of the Japanese parliament blamed an "educational campaign" in northern China today for causing the present conflict between Japan and China.

The parliament members passed through Chicago en route to Paris for an international meeting of parliamentary groups of the powers. Their spokesman, Sadayoshi Hitotsumatsu, said:

"China started the war. China started everything. We just had to fight back. Japan by right of treaty had a military force in northern China."

Soldiers Carry Tree Branches As Camouflage

First Reporter to Visit Lines Reports Aviators Take Heavy Toll.

(H. R. Ekins, United Press war correspondent and the only foreign newspaperman who has penetrated Chinese positions in the undeclared Shanghai war, yesterday went into the territory occupied by the crack Eighty-eighth Division of the Central Chinese Army northwest of Shanghai. He tells about it in the following dispatch.—Editor's note.)

By H. R. Ekins.

Copyright, 1937, by the United Press.

With Field Headquarters, Eighty-eighth Division of the Chinese Army, at Nanying (Friday), Aug. 20.—I spent yesterday afternoon in the middle of China's hell, on the plains north of Shanghai, where the Chinese Eighty-eighth Division is fighting to split the Japanese forces across the Yangtse Delta.

Most of the time I spent with Col. Fa Kwei-tze, and I soon found out what the Chinese fear most.

It isn't the Japanese troops, nor the Japanese guns; it is the everlasting rain of bombs from the air, the bombardment mercilessly blasting away from the sky.

I watched the Chinese prepare to strike across the delta to prevent the Japanese troops from crossing to Shanghai when they land—which is expected momentarily.

Have Not Landed.

They had not landed yet and after seeing with my own eyes that the Chinese continue to be confronted only by that everlasting blasting from above, I asked Fa Kwei-tze where the Japanese land troops could be found.

His lips curled and he answered shortly:

"We drove them out. They are at Hongkew and Yangtzepoo."

His fist clenched as he spoke. Within a few feet of us one of the aerial bombs had landed with a nerve-shattering explosion that sent a cloud of dust over us.

No one had time for anything but war. I watched a farmer trudging along the road with a bundle of straw. As the cars passed he stepped aside and an instant later a spray of shrapnel knocked him over like a duckpin.

Lies Dying Unnoticed.

His garments were nearly blown away, and there were terrible shrapnel wounds in his back, but he lay there by the raodside, practically unnoticed, bleeding to death in his bundle of straw.

It is not callousness. The Chinese soldiers and officers have no time for anything but the grim business ahead.

In an instant I also had forgotten him. The deadly whine overhead told us what was coming and we scattered for the field like so many scared rabbits. I fell to the ground, clutching lumps of soil as the shadow of a big Japanese bomber passed over us, raking the highway.

This time I wore Khaki clothes, after getting a sharp rebuke from the Chinese Wednesdty for coming out among them in white drill—a blazing target for a sharp-eyed Japanese machine-gunner.

I found the countryside had been transformed overnight to meet the danger from the air. Soldiers and civilians trudging along under huge branches of trees, intending to camouflage their movements from Japanese aviators.

It struck me that the Japanese fliers, looking down on the weird scene, must think the trees along the Yangtse delta have learned to walk.

Bridges Like Forests.

Even the bridges in this country, cut and cross-cut with canals, now look like miniature forests.

As we approached Liuho, near the mouth of the Whangpoo, where that muddy stream pours into the yellow Yangtse, we saw for the first time the shelling from Japanese warships.

We did not know what ship was firing, and as the shells fell around us we had an eerie feeling of not knowing from what direction death would come.

Mile after mile as we drove through this country, wasted by the cruel agonies of war, we realized the staggering toll in death and destruction that was being piled up.

Selling Extends Decline on Curb

New York, Aug. 19 (AP).—A decline in stocks on the curb exchange broadened out today under a moderate increase in offerings and losses of fractions to more than 2 points were numerous at the finish. With liquidation in leading farm commodities and bonds discouraging bulls, the descent gained headway. Transactions, however, totaled only 221,000 shares against 199,000 the preceding session.

Countering the main trend, Aluminum of America rallied 2 at 156. But scattered gains were outweighed by losses of fractions to more than a point in such issues as American Cyanamid B, 35¾; Cord, 4⅞; Consolidated Gas of Baltimore, 77¼; Creole Petroleum, 36¾; Hecla Mining, 17¾; Hudson Bay, 32⅜; St. Regis Paper, 8½, and Humble, 63⅝. Newmont was off more than 2 as mining shares suffered loss of favor with the rest of the list.

Dancing Features Democrats' Cruise

Dancing to the rhythmic tunes of Jarboe's Nighthawks and several Irish ballads by John S. White, a member of the Maryland Legislature, featured a moonlight cruise of the Young Men's Democratic Club of Prince Georges County on the steamer Potomac last night.

More than 1,000 members of the Democratic Club and their guests made the trip under ideal weather conditions.

R. Earle Sheriff, chairman of the committee in charge of arrangements, said more than $300 was raised for the club's sinking fund.

Japanese Marines, Driven Back to River, Fighting Desperately to Escape Annihilation

district, where other reports said the Chinese had penetrated. There were no Chinese in sight.—Editor's note.)

Neutral experts agreed that should the Chinese reach the river—Shanghai's highway to the sea and the avenue by which reinforcements and munitions must reach the Japanese—the position of the latter would become extremely precarious.

Chinese forces actually in action around Shanghai were estimated at more than 100,000 men. The Japanese engaged in the land battle were believed to be outnumbered by more than four to one. They were nearly all naval landing forces, or marines.

The Chinese drive came from the direction of Kiangwan, in the northeast, and an extreme advance of 4 miles at one point was claimed.

The eastern district battle was the climax to a seventr day of Shanghai conflict, which saw troops newly come from Japan rushed from transports into action, first to carry on a Japanese offensive against the Chinese Kiangwan-Woosung lines, later to stem the Chinese advance.

To Extend Front.

Japanese dispositions indicated the battle for Shanghai shortly would be fought on a greatly extended front, with their own forces swelled to many times the 7,000 marines who began the fight a week ago.

Seven troopships disgorged men and munitions at Japanese wharves on the north bank of the Whangpoo today. Sixteen more were reported standing off the mouth of the Whangpoo, ready to try a landing at Liuho, 17 miles northwest of here, under cover of darkness and the guns of the battle fleet.

These newcomers were Army regulars, said to comprise at least two of the homeland divisions. Reports said some 60,000 were already embarked or under orders for China.

There were authoritative indications the Japanese high command would try to put expeditions ashore at other points along the coast to flank the Chinese out of their defense of Shanghai. One point named was Chapu, on the Bay of Hangchow, 45 miles southwest of here.

50 Warships Block River.

Fifty Japanese warships, including four battleships and at least one aircraft carrier, lay between Shanghai and the sea prepared to cover the army's landings or carry war to Chinese positions ashore.

The arrival of reinforcements from Japan was the signal for the first real Japanese attempt at a land offensive. As the new levies came ashore they were rushed into front lines which began a thrust at the Chinese stretched out between Kiangwan and Woosung, respectively, 4 and 10 miles north of International Shanghai.

Apparently before this offensive could be carried to definite results, the Chinese struck back in the Yangtzepoo area and gave the Japanese land fofces all they could handle.

Throughout the day, as for a week past, the Japanese warships on the Whangpoo River and Japanese air forces hammered mercilessly at Chinese positions ashore. The bombardment of the lines at Kiangwan before the Japanese began their attack there was especially severe.

Bomb Medical College.

Neutral military experts saw in the large Japanese reinforcements indications the Tokyo high command wanted to end the Shanghai conflict as soon as possible so it could return to its main energies to further conquest and consolidation in North China.

In the aerial phase of the batile, Chinese asserted Japanese planes had dropped 13 bombs on the Chinese Southeastern Medical College near Shanghai, although it displayed Red Cross flags conspicuously. It contained many Chinese wounded. Many were killed.

The Japanese air forces continued to raid far inland. Eight heavy bombers flew over Nanking, dropped several bombs in the southern suburbs, killed or wounded many people. However, they failed to damage the important air base. Chinese asserted two Japanese bombers had been shot down on inland raids.

Japanese Advance in North.

Japan's increasing forces in North China battered steadily at Nankow Pass, the gateway to Mongolia northwest of Peiping, and fastened domination more tightly on the whole North Hopei region.

The Japanese declared they penetrated 5 miles into the winding series of defiles, 15 miles long, which makes up Nankow Pass, moving steadily from ridge to ridge in spite of stubborn Chinese resistance.

Two Chinese divisions were reported moving into northern Chahar Province, on the right flank of the Japanese army before Nankow, but Japanese officers said an expedition from Jehol, part of Japan's protectorate of Manchukuo, could deal easily with that menace.

They paid more attention to Chinese troop movements north from Paotingfu toward Peiping. The Japanese army, they said, was prepared to strike heavily if this advance continues.

Convergence of Chinese forces around Tsingtao, chief seaport of the Shantung coast, indicated that may be the next trouble center. Chinese units were encircling the city—long a center of Japanese political and economic influence—with defensive positions, and large forces were gathering in the rear.

A small naval unit is the only Japanese force now at Tsingtao, but the Japanese repeatedly have declared they would not hesitate to land an expedition at Tsingtao if their interests were menaced there.

U. S. Defies Ban Of Belligerents On Use of River

Insists on Free Hand to Evacuate; Liner Arrives for More Refugees.

ly by the Japanese and other foreign authorities. Other foreign consuls were understood to have made similar replies.

Admiral Hasegawa's notification threatened to give rise to a serious international situation. He declared his flagship, the outmoded cruiser Idzumo, had been placed in the middle of the Whangpoo. He said the south channel of the river, next to the Poohung battlefield, would be closed to traffic of all nationalities, and that traffic between the Idzumo and the North Bank would be subject to restrictions imposed by the Japanese navy.

American and other foreign authorities were notified by the Nanking government that unless they moved their warships now in Shanghai harbor 5 miles away from any Japanese men-o-war or compelled the Japanese to move such a distance away, China could not "be responsible for the consequences."

This was China's reply to recent complaints from the powers that bombs from Chinese warplanes had imperiled neutral warships off Shanghai.

United States officials said that with the evacuation of Americans in full swing it obviously would be impossible to move the cruiser Augusta, flagship of the United States Asiatic fleet, from her present position in the Whangpoo River.

There she helps cover the withdrawal of American refugees and is in a position to lend protection to the remaining American community in Shanghai.

The attitude of British and French officials was understood to be the same as the American.

The compound of the American Southern Baptist Mission in Chapei, northern Chinese section of Shanghai, was heavily bombed by Japanese airplanes today, but it was believed all the 20 American missionaries usually there had withdrawn some days ago. The bombs apparently were intended for the Chapei electric power station nearby.

News reached the consulate-general that Japanese planes also bombed the American mission hospital and school at Nantungchow, 70 miles northwest of here on the north bank of the Yangtze River. Miss Nancy Fry, of Bedford, Ind., member of the Central China Christian Mission, reported the bombing and said all the Americans were safe.

Consular officials here telegraphed, advising the Americans at Nantungchow to evacuate immediately. They were unable to account for the bombing unless Chinese forces had concentrated near the mission. Beside Miss Fry, the Americans at Nantungchow were believed to be Dr. and Mrs. G. L. Hagman, Louisville, Ky.; Mr. and Mrs. P. R. Slater, Moline, Ill.; L. A. Ely, Indianapolis, and V. Mushrush, address not given.

Consul General Gauss ordered all women members of his staff to leave on the President Hoover tomorrow. That liner was said to be making a record run and was expected to halt off the mouth of the Whangpoo tomorrow only long enough to disembark her contingent of Marines and take aboard refugees for a speedy run back to Manila.

In spite of official insistence on their departure, many American women have declared their intention of staying. Some of them have organized relief work for wounded Chinese soldiers and the hundreds of thousands of Chinese refugees wandering homeless and near starvation in Shanghai streets.

The food shortage continued a grave menace, although American Marines were helping International Settlement authorities bring in essential supplies. More than 40 Chinese rice shops, closed since the fighting began last week, reopened, but hungry and infuriated Chinese continued to roam the streets looking for food or "traitors" on whom they could vent their wrath. At least seven such "traitors" were beaten or strangled to death in the International areas today.

Dispatches from Paotingfu, 85 miles southwest of Peiping and one of the main concentration points for Chinese armies in the North, said a handful of American and other foreign missionaries was remaining there in disregard of official advice to evacuate, and carrying on relief work for the Chinese soldiers.

At Kuling, mountain resort on the middle Yangtze in Kiangsi Province, some 400 Americans and other foreigners were virtually marooned, with food supplies running short.

Some 1,400 British women and children were taken down the Whangpoo today aboard three British destroyers to sail for Hongkong on the liner Empress of Asia.

The non-Japanese part of the International Settlement was steadily mobilizing a small army for its own protection. Arrival of a battalion of the Royal Ulster Rifles raised the British garrison to three battalions, totaling about 2,700 men. United States Marines and sailors in Shanghai totalled 1,900, with another 100 due on the President Hoover tomorrow.

Sale of Living Human Tissue To Be Object of New Bureau

15 Already Registered as Donors to Supply Parts of Body for Grafting; Purchase of Whole Ear May Become Possible.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 19.—A New York plastic surgeon yesterday disclosed plans for a unique organization designed to bring about the purchase and sale of living parts for the human body.

Fifteen persons already have registered with the "grafting donors' bureau," established recently by Dr. James Stotter, he said, and stand ready to sell bits of their bodies to anyone who will buy them.

They have agreed to part with cartilages from their ears or pieces of bone from their eighth ribs, at a price.

These parts, used in remodeling bashed-in noses, are the only ones the surgeon said he would attempt to transplant from one person to another at present. Later, he said it might become possible to buy and sell whole ears, or sections of skin.

Czechs Suspect Nazis Inspired Lisbon Affront

Praha Fears Becoming the Arena for Red-Fascist Duel.

By the Associated Press.

London, Aug. 19.—Portugal's one-sided severance of diplomatic relations wth Czechoslovakia became a red flag tonight for the suspicions of all Europe.

Czechs, in Praha, their capital, asked if Germany is working behind the scenes to make their strategic, hemmed-in country a "future Rhineland" in a coming struggle between the two great political camps, fascism and communism.

Authoritarian Portugal blamed a "third party"—presumably Soviet Russia—for influencing the Czechs to fail to fill an order for machine guns, official reason for the breach. Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy sympathized.

Within 24 hours, however, other capitals of Europe had supplanted Portugal's expressed motive for the break with strong ideas on deeper causes—militant interests in the Spanish war and the often-expressed theory that Germany is preparing to attack Czechoslovakia.

Czechoslovakian authorities explained their armament industry had been unable to supply Portugal with new Bren machine guns because it had been swamped with Czechoslovakian and other previously placed orders. Then Praha's suspicions turned to Germany's and Portugal's friendship for the rebel Generalissimo Francisco Franco in Spain.

Bluntly, Praha questioned Lisbon motives for this "unprecedented action" and tried to discover whether Germany inspired the move as a prelude to pouncing on the Czechs.

Senate Passes Two Major Bills In Race to Quit

Tax and Sugar Measures Approved; House Acts on Wagner Plan.

vised him such a study is being made.

There was a lull, and Garner raised his gavel.

"Without objection," he said, "the bill is passed."

The bill, so complex in its draftsmanship that little effort was made to explain anything but its purposes, would impose a virtual death sentence on domestic and foreign personal holding companies, and would check the use of foreign corporations, multiple trusts and incorporation of personal talents to avoid income taxes.

The conference report on the sugar marketing bill incorporated another so-called "compromise," lifting after March 1, 1940, proposed restrictions on the sugar refining output on Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

Opposed Restriction.

The President has objected to any restrictions of a "discriminatory" character against the island refiners, had threatened to veto the original House bill, and had protested to Harrison the Senate's suggested compromise.

Sponsors of the conference report expressed hope the President would accept the agreement to lift island restrictions after 1940 (unless Congress meanwhile votes otherwise), but there was still possibility of White House rejection.

"I can't for the life of me see how the President can veto this legislation," Senator Harrison declared before the Senate voted approval.

Before voting approval, the Senate defeated efforts by Senator Claude Pepper, Florida Democrat, to delay action. Pepper vainly had fought for a larger Florida sugar quota.

Quota Extended.

The bill extends through 1940 the Jones-Costigan sugar marketing quota system, applying to domestic raw sugar production and the output of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Philippines, Cuba and the Virgin Islands. The excise tax of 50 cents per 100 pounds on raw sugar (invalidated by the Supreme Court), would be renewed to finance benefit payments to sugar producers.

As the Senate romped down the adjournment stretch, re-passing the Wheeler-Johnson child labor measure and other less important bills in its flight, the Senate Appropriations Committee brought out its third deficiency bill, already passed by the House.

The House measure was increased by $50,000,000 to provide benefits for sugar producers, and the $75,000,000 House authorization for Maritime Commission ship-building contracts was doubled. The committee also approved the $20,000,000 House appropriation for loans to farm tenants and for retirement of submarginal land in the West. Senator James F. Byrnes, South Carolina Democrat, was authorized to offer an amendment covering housing bill costs.

As the last appropriations bill cleared committee, Chariman Carter Glass of the Senate Appropriations Committee disclosed this session's appropriations will total $9,389,488,893. Not allowing for the 1936 soldiers bonus, this would raise appropriations $1,290,089,000 above last year.

The deficiency bill carries a committee amendment, to be offered on the floor by Byrnes, sealing into law part of the gentleman's agreement with the Administration to make cotton loans and subsequent subsidy payments, if Congress takes up crop control legislation the first thing next session. The Senate already has agreed to give crop control priority, and the resolution is pending in the House.

The Byrnes amendment makes available up to $65,000,000 in 1938 and 1939 to the Secretary of Agriculture for price adjustment payments. Cotton farmers who comply with the proposed 1938 crop adjustment program would be paid subsidies "at a rate per pound equal to the difference between 12 cents per pound and the average price of seven-eighths middling cotton on the ten spot cotton markets."

Earlier yesterday, Senator Bankhead (Democrat), Alabama, asked President Roosevelt to authorize a Government loan of 10 cents a pound on cotton.

Under the so-called "gentleman's agreement," the President would authorize loans on cotton, but no figure has been fixed. He was said to have agreed to grant a subsidy also representing the difference between the loan figure and 12 cents, base on compliance with the next crop adjustment program.

A. F. of L. Asks Auto Election On Craft Basis

Challenges NLRB Rights to Pick Bargaining Agent at Allis Chalmers.

By the Associated Press.

American Federation of Labor leaders asked the Labor Relations Board yesterday to order a projected election at the Allis Chalmers Corporation's Milwaukee, Wis., plant held on a craft basis.

They protested against granting the United Automobile Workers' petition for an election to determine whether that C. I. O. Union should represent all the employes in the plant.

William Green, A. F. of L. president, and A. F. of L. union officials sat in the hearing room while Joseph Padway, of the Wisconsin Federation of Labor argued for the crafts.

Padway maintained blanketing 8,000 Allis Chalmers employes into an industrial union would rob skilled craftsmen of legal and economic rights. He maintained the Wagner act did not give the board unqualified right to select "the appropriate bargaining unit."

Lee Pressman, chief C. I. O. counsel, and Max Geline, attorney for auto workers, told the board A. F. of L. craft unions tried in vain for several years to break into the plant.

They said when the Federation local bolted to the United Automobile Workers, its membership increased almost immediately from 2,000 to 7,500.

500 More to Join WPA Relief Army In Capital Today

Between 500 and 700 more WPA marchers were expected to arrive in the Capital today to swell the ranks of the advance guard which came by bus earlier this week to demand enactment of the Schwellenbach-Allen resolution to curtail WPA dismissals.

Yesterday the marchers, after their second night spent in the open at the foot of the Washington Monument, sent committees to call on various members of Congress.

Thirty alliance members picketed the U. S. Chamber of Commerce Building at Connecticut avenue and H street, protesting that organization's stand on relief measures. Further conferences were held with Government officials with a view to providing housing facilities for the marchers.

Lawyer Fixes Up Farm, Finds It's Wrong One

Spends 2 Yrs. Renovating Va. Home—Then Two Strangers Claim It.

the office, the Hudginses motored down to Chantilly. With ax and scythe, they cleared the brush and undergrowth, met and survived poison ivy. The roadway needed mending, and that was attended to.

Nights they spent in a tent in the open, or in one of the old rooms they had cleared of debris. Friends motored down on Sunday picnics, and fell under the spell.

But one thing was a source of perturbation to the Hudginses. They had rented the rolling fields to a farmer, who came up to Washington one day and said he needed pastures for his cows. The Hudginses never saw any cows. Still, that was part of the mystery of the old place, and they let it pass.

And then one day came complications. Hudgins had started a fire to burn the brush and was getting ready to jack up the house. A neighbor came over to see what the smoke was about. He was mysteriously inquisitive about the whole business, but the Hudginses let that pass, too.

The next day came two more strangers. They announced themselves as "the Harrison brothers."

"Howdy, Stranger."

"Howdy," said one of the men.

"Howdy," said Hudgins.

"Just dropped over to see who owns this farm," said the stranger.

"I own it," said Hudgins.

"But seems to me I bought it last year," said the stranger. "Paid $2,300 for it."

"I bought it more than two years ago," said Hudgins. He wanted to get mad, but couldn't. Somehow the Harrison brothers were so nice about telling him they owned his farm.

And then he had a disconcerting doubt. What if the brothers were right? There was the deed he had purchased and the titles he had searched. But what if he had been directed to the wrong farm? And what about those missing cows?

But Hudgins is a lawyer and he wasn't going to lose a case. He almost convinced the Harrisons there was something wrong with thei rtitle.

Finally Finds Cows.

But he didn't convince himself. What about those cows? He sought out J. B. Armfield, the farmer who had rented his field for pasture land, and put it up to him.

"No," Armfield quietly advised. "Your place is up the road a piece. Been wonderin' why you hadn't been down."

Yes, the Hudgins like the new place better. It has 145 acres, instead of 80. There is brush to cut and a running brook, and grazing nearby are Armfield's cows. And there isn't a house to bother with tearing down and building a new one. Come to think of it, they think they'll build a log cabin.

In case you are puzzled (and we still are), Hudgins bought his place from a Virginia bank, sight unseen, and there was something faulty about the directions. He just drove up to the Harrison place and decided it was his.

The last ship equipped with 16-inch guns was the U. S. S. Virginia, commissioned about 14 years ago. The battleships West Virginia, Maryland, and Colorado are the only ships equipped with 16 guns, made at the Washington Navy Yard.

Officials said the new guns will not be radically different from those now in service.

280,000 Students Lose U. S. Aid for Next Year

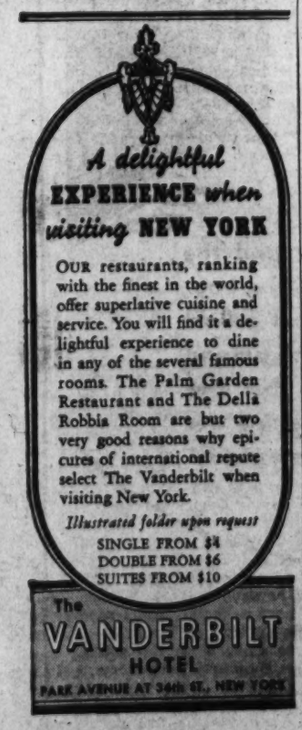

By the Associated Press.

Aubrey Williams, National Youth Administrator, disclosed yesterday aid to university students during the coming school year will be cut to approximately one-third of the 1936 total.

Last year 420,000 students received $15 monthly. While $33,000,000 was available last year, there will be only $11,000,00 during the coming term. The number of students receiving aid will be reduced and not the monthly figure.

Fighting Homesickness Proves Task for CCC Camp Officials

Mother and Dad and the Girl Friend Principal Reasons for Enrollees Going AWOL; First Few Weeks Are Toughest.

The War Department, that stern master of men in khaki, has officially recognized the pangs of homesickness and treats it not at all in top sergeant fashion.

The homesickness that engages the department is that in the CCC camps. Corps area commanders have received instructions as follows:

"Homesickness is undoubtedly one of the main causes for enrollees leaving camp without authority and most frequently occurs in the first few weeks of an individual's enrollment."

The situation should be combatted "through general persuasion and frequent conversations on the part of both company officers and educational advisers," it was said.

CCC officials have concluded that three reasons especially are responsible for the homesickness epidemic: Mother and dad, the girl friend or the dog. Previously, the officials urged the homefolk to refrain from writing such things as:

"The faithful old dog sleeps by your bed every night. He seems to miss you so much."

"I saw Mary with the Smith boy yesterday and she seemed so pretty."

On July 1 the policy of enrolling youths between the ages of 17 and 23 was begun. Homesickness spread like measles. On the previous year the enrollment was of more age, 17 to 28, and homesickness wasn't such a problem.

The department feels that if the camp officers can fight off the pangs in the enrollees in the first few weeks, the "goings over the hill," as unauthorized leaves are informally called—would be minimized.

And, meanwhile, in the camps the enrollees have conferred a new degree on the educational advisers and officers—Doctor of Homesickness.

Auto Door Handle Is 'Purse-Snatcher'

The mystery of the purse which was "snatched" by an automobile driven by Paul C. Sheets, 28, of 105 Fifteenth street southeast, Wednesday, was cleared up yesterday.

The vehicle, while passing a street car platform at Connecticut avenue and R street northwest on that day, ran off with the picketbook of Mrs. Elsie Eaton, 923 Virginia avenue southwest. The purse dangled from the car handled. When Sheets arrived at his home he found the purse and turned it over to police.

8 Join in Race To Head Young Democrats Club

10,000 Attend Convention; James Roosevelt Is Keynoter.

By the Associated Press.

Indianapolis, Aug. 19.—Eight men sought tonight the presidency of the Young Democrats of America, as an estimated 10,000 party adherents opened their third biennial convention here.

Behind the scenes, observers noted, was a Nation-wide significance in the choice of the delegates who will ballot Saturday morning for the presidency and three other offices—vice presidency, secretaryship and treasurer.

Alvin C. Johnson, Indianapolis attorney and State Young Democrat president, opposed by Indiana Democrate State Committee officials, has withheld official announcement of his presidential candidacy, said last night he would seek the post.

Thomas Logan, of Covington, president of Kentucky Young Democrats, said tonight he would withdraw from the race for the presidency in favor of Johnson, should the latter announce for the office.

Kentucky delegates voted today at Logan's request to support Johnson. It was reported this would enable Logan to deliver 77 votes to Indiana's "favorite son."

Another last-minute entry was Wilford Peebles, of Youngstown, Ohio.

Delegates from ten Far Western States voted today to support Seattle, Wash., in its bid to be 1939 convention city. San Francisco which got one vote to Seattle's nine, withdrew from the contest. Other cities bidding are Pittsburgh, Omaha, Chicago, Philadelphia and Richmond, Va.

Agency Carraway, of Tampa, Fla., national executive secretary, said there would be 384 votes in the convention, with 193 necessary for election.

Other announced candidates for the presidency are Judge Charles Bliss, of Taylorville, Ill.; Robert Campbell, of Wichita, Kans.; Paul A. Williams, of Columbia, Mo., and Lockwood Thompson, of Clevaland, and Pitt Tyson Waner, of Alabama.

Canadians Seek Advisory Status For Aged Jurists

Toronto, Aug. 19. (Canadian Press).—A proposal to retire elderly members of Canada's supreme court, but keep them available as advisory justices came before the Canadian Bar Association, in convention here today.

The suggestion was advanced in a report by the administration of civil justice committee.

The committee would retire judges at full salary, if appointed after 1920 and after 20 years' service, but require them to remain available for judicial duty when needed.

Supreme court justices at present must retire at the age of 75. There is no compulsory retirement age for provincial superior court jurists and the committee bill would apply to them also.

22 Pct. Net Income Tax Asked of Alien Firms

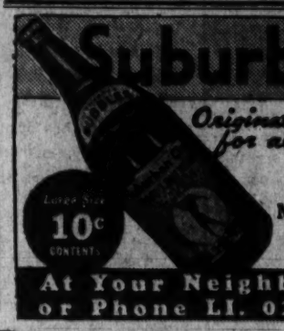

By the Associated Press.

The Internal Revenue Bureau ruled yesterday foreign corporations operating apartments, or other real property, in this country for profit are subject to a 22 per cent tax on net income from United States operations.

The bureau said a nonresident alien individual engaged in similar operations is subject to a tax of only 10 per cent on rentals or similar income from this country.

Speaking Of Privilege.

Gov. Graves of Alabama has appointed his wife as successor to Senator Black.

The widespread expectation that he would do this shows how accustomed we have become to the reprehensible practice of putting women in high offices merely because they are wives or widows of prominent politicians. There are a few capable women in public life who might never have emerged into the political limelight if their husbands had survived them. But their accidental fitness for undeserved honors conferred upon them for sentimental or sordid reasons does not justify an essentially vicious method of selection.

The temporary elevation of Mrs. Huey P. Long to the Senatorial post left vacant by her husband's assassination provided a particularly flagrant instance of abuse of the appointive privilege. Nobody attempted to defend this appointment on the ground of personal fitness—least of all the modest Mrs. Long. It was patently a calculated maneuver by the late Senator's henchmen to keep control of his Louisiana political machine during a critical interregnum. To what extent Mrs. Graves will be able to aid her husband's political ambitions by a temporary sojourn in Washington is problematical. But such an appointment was admittedly also dictated by ulterior considerations.

To use women as passive tools to further the political ambitions of relatives, or to assist the machinations of political groups and factions, is an affront not only to these voluntary victims of undercover plotters, but to all members of their sex. Those who are willing to submit to such treatment hinder rather than promote the participation of able, conscientious women in government. They also help to foster nepotism—a particularly vicious manifestation of the spoils system and an arch enemy of our democratic form of government.

In the speech which he delivered at the Virginia Dare celebration President Roosevelt paid eloquent tribute to the principle of majority rule. He rightly maintained that there can be no true democracy where a privileged minority keeps power in its own hands. For a public official to employ the power to appoint as a means of strengthening his hold on office or influencing popular choice of candidates for office tends to defeat a fair expression of majority opinion.

For the head of a State government to select his own wife to represent that State in the Senate of the United States is an improper and indefensible proceeding, regardless of the personal qualifications of the appointee. Such practices savor of dynastic rule; they are repugnant to a people nurtured in the democratic tradition and taught to believe in the principle of majority rule.

Two Airport Bills.

Hope that the airport tangle may yet be straightened out was revived yesterday when the House Military Affairs Committee gave a favorable report to the King bill for development of a landing field at Camp Springs. Since this bill has already been passed by the Senate, the House should have no difficulty in sending it to the President before adjournment.

Senator King's tactics in delaying a conference on the May and Copeland bills appears to be responsible for the activity at the south end of the Capitol on the Camp Springs measure. If that method succeeds in committing Congress to the development of a national airport, it will serve a useful purpose. But it would be unfortunate, indeed, if the delay on the May and Copeland bills for improvement of Washington Airport should prevent any action whatever at the present session.

Enactment of both bills is obviously desirable. Senator King's measure would merely grant authority for construction of a landing field at Camp Springs. It would carry no funds to begin the work. Several years might be required to bring that site into use as an air base. So elimination of the hazards from the field now in operation is of vital importance.

At the same time it would be unfair to ask the private owners of Washington Airport to spend substantial sums for improvements without knowing whether or not the Government intends to build a national air terminal here. If this close relationship between the bills is fully explained in the House, it will be a strong argument for double action.

There is a question, however, as to whether Washington could stand the shock of having two airport bills passed in a day after pleading for action, without results, for more than ten years.

Gone With The Wind.

Often in history great nations have risked moral condemnation and jeopardized their future in order to satisfy a lust for conquest. Never has such action been taken more blatantly, and with less regard for the consequences to civilization as a whole, than in the case of the present Japanese attack on Shanghai.

Win or lose, Japan will never be able to justify this unspeakable outrage. All the smooth evasiveness in which her diplomatists are so skilled will not serve to gloss the present ineradicable stain upon her honor. All the power of her efficient military machine will not be strong enough to offset the enduring hostility which Japan is now creating by this display of naked, undisguised brutality.

In spite of abundant evidence of hypocrisy, there has always been a strong disposition in this country to believe the pious pretensions of Japan's statesmen, and to put faith in the assurances of her leaders. There were many who nodded in approval when Ambassador Hirosi Saito in recent months rang the changes on his statement that, "we have no idea whatever of aggression or expansion." There were few who smiled cynically when he solemnly asserted over a national radio hookup that "we are the leaders of humanity in our sphere of the world."

But it may be confidently predicted that the list of such deceptions on the part of Japan's envoys will not make their future task easier in any civilized country. There is little chance of long-range success for a diplomacy predicated on the silly assumption that if one is sly enough one can fool all a foreign people all the time.

So far as the United States today is concerned, the direction of national sympathy is clear. Although we are not a vindictive people, an overwhelming majority of Americans hope that the Japanese invaders may be driven into the river at Shanghai. And beyond that there is an evident desire that the Chinese will prove themselves sufficiently strong in the field to put a final end to Japan's piecemeal aggression in the north.

This anti-Japanese feeling is reflected in the attitude assumed by the Department of State. The Administration has made it clear that it will not invoke that monumental piece of folly known as the neutrality act. Primarily this is because neutrality as laid down by this legislation would put us in the position of helping Japan and penalizing China, in spite of the overwhelming evidence that the present war is entirely of Japan's making. The situation of course emphasizes the sheer idiocy of the legislation on which Congress wasted so much time. But the stupidity of ever enacting such a short-sighted program need not be emphasized so long as we can find some honorable way to avoid putting it into effect.

The Administration, furthermore, has made plain that it will reinforce rather than evacuate the American troops in the war zone, and will not tolerate the seizure of American properties there by the Japanese troops. This, too, is out of accord with the cut-and-run attitude of the neutrality spokesmen. But it conforms with the consensus of public opinion. The American people want their Government to take no action which would render Japan's barefaced attempt at conquest easier. On the contrary, the more difficulties which we can place in Japan's path with perfect legitimacy, the better.

In their hostile reaction to present Japanese policy, moreover, the American people are showing obvious common sense. They know that Japan smashed world peace machinery and destroyed the constructive influence of the League of Nations six years ago. They know that Japan thereby paved the way for the Italian seizure of Ethiopia and for the current Italo-German intervention in Spain. They know that, if Japan is successful in this new aggression, others increasingly unrestrained will follow elsewhere until at last this country is inescapably involved. From this springs much of the universal hope that Japan will be stopped, and stopped with a jolt, right now.

In an aggression as flagrant and merciless as this at Shanghai, menacing the lives of millions of helpless noncombatants, making a shambles out of one of the world's greatest cities, the very word neutrality is contemptible. It is not a question of safeguarding American properties, or even of protecting American lives. The fundamental issue is whether or not a rapacious, ruthless military dictatorship is to be given our tacit support and approval in its attempt utterly to destroy a nation whose only sin is to be inclined for peace.

And so, as was predicted by all with eyes to see, our vaunted neutrality policy goes down the wind in its first real test. No munitions maker and no international banker has urged that the act be repealed; no merchant of death has inveighed against it as harmful to his interests. It will not be invoked simply because the great body of American opinion refuses to stand for a law which, as is now generally realized, must always operate to encourage the strong to trample on the weak.

Back To Jefferson.

President Roosevelt's discovery that history is more than "a series of facts and dates" encourages the hope that he will be able to find time to prosecute his researches in this field. For the Roanoke Island speech indicates that he still has a few gaps to fill in respect to the history of political thought in his own country.

It would seem particularly desirable, in view of the ease with which the name of Thomas Jefferson is involved as a sponsor of the New Deal, to examine a little more closely the views which the third President actually held on the subject of democracy. The relevant material is easily available at the Library of Congress.

While Jefferson, of course, believed that all citizens should be endowed with the same legal rights he never endorsed the doctrine that all men are equally competent to exercise command over their fellows. The success of democracy, he thought, depended on the good sense of the electorate in choosing superior minds as their elected magistrates and representatives. "That form of government is the best," he wrote to John Adams on October 28, 1813, "which provides the most effectually for a pure selection of these natural aristoi (aristocrats) into offices of the Government."

In general, Jefferson maintained, the people could be trusted to elect the really good and wise. But "no government," as he had written to Washington as early as September 9, 1792, "ought to be without censors. And where the press is free no one ever will." President Roosevelt, as he pursues his researches into Jeffersoniana, will doubtless come to agree that the founder of his party saw much utility in critical editorials, even when directed at his own policies.

And it was a further cherished belief of Jefferson, found in his "Notes on Virginia" and elsewhere, that "every government degenerates when trusted to the rulers of the people alone." The moral here scarcely needs emphasis. It has been so recently confirmed by the court-packing proposal and its repudiation when referred to those elected representatives in whom Jefferson had trust.

It is a little difficult to see why the President should have quoted as lavishly from Lord Macaulay's famous letter of 1857, picturing with great prescience the problems which might be expected to confront a pure democracy as economic difficulties accumulated. Because Americans today witness some of the problems Macaulay anticipated eighty years ago, Mr. Roosevelt obscurely reasons that they for that reason condemn the American system of government.

It is at least plausible to see quite a different explanation in the attitude of those who believe in the sound Jeffersonian maxim that "every government degenerates when trusted to the rulers of the people alone." They may be concerned to preserve America from the fate Macaulay foresaw by getting back to the true Jeffersonian doctrine, which Macaulay (among others) never really understood.

Fair Play On The Hill.

Party politics received a brisk repudiation on Capitol Hill yesterday. The House, ignoring the recommendation of an election committee, refused to unseat a Republican Representative from New Hampshire whose election has been protested by his Democratic campaign opponent.

Thus, to a story of confusion, mystery and obvious partisanship has been added a heartening chapter of fair play. By a 2-to-1 majority, the House voted to repoll a small New Hampshire town where an unexplained discrepancy between the election day tally sheets and the total number of votes cast was discovered.

The vote is crucial for, after a recount in November, the two candidates for Representative in the district were found tied. The State ballot law commission intervened and found in favor of the Democrat. Then the discrepancy was uncovered. Again the ballot commission investigated, finding this time in favor of the Republican who, duly certified, ultimately took his seat in Washington.

But the Democrat filed objections with the House. After a most perfunctory investigation which at first ignored even the contested ballots, five Democrats on the committee overrode their three Republican colleagues and reported in favor of the Democratic candidate notwithstanding the Republican's official certification.

That they have now been rebuked and a veritable Solomon's formula substituted for their decision is a high tribute to the vitality of ideals in the National Legislature.

Horns Will Be Blown.

From the Louisville Times.

Oscar Gunderson, Chicago engineer, completed a 17-000-mile automobile trip without once blowing his horn. So he drew the obvious conclusion as to lack of necessity for horn blowing.

But the Oregonian, of Portland, says there's no need in arguing the question. That paper thinks horn-blowers are born, not made.

They may be seen and heard in Louisville blowing for passenger trains to clear the crossing, blowing in traffic jams when they couldn't possibly get through if they were on the front end of the line themselves.

Some of them blow just for the fun of blowing. They are born, not made, as the Oregonian points out, and laments: "And because ordinary horns are not loud enough, they buy special gadgets to complain still more loudly against other people involved in the traffic problem."

Horns on automobiles are necessities at times. No law could prevent unnecessary use. Mr. Gunderson had a jolly time, no doubt, but his experiment proves little.

Dry Favoring Repeal.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The cause of temperance will not succeed as long as we who favor it continue at odds. As a dry, I favored and worked for prohibition. Now that prohibition has been proven such a dismal and hopeless failure, still as a dry, I favor repeal and strict control.

Take the matter of serving hard liquor at lunch counters. Blind indeed is the dry who cannot see that lunch-counter drinking is far more desirable than old-time saloon drinking. The former tends toward moderation, while the latter leads to drunkenness. Abstainers do not realize that liquor has far less effect when consumed with food. Also that several drinks in rapid succession are not likely to be consumed among customers who are eating. A casual observation will prove both statements.

We drys should be thankful that the old-time saloon is gone. The one thing that guarantees its permanent retirement is the scattering of drinking places and the increase in their number. The old drinking rendezvous is, happily, no more, and in its place has come the less objectionable cocktail room and the lunch-counter bar. The presence of women in both places tends further to limit the number of drinks per person. Men do not drink themselves into insensibility in the presence of women.

As we all know, the evil in liquor is not in drinking, but in excessive drinking. The more respectable we make our drinking places, the less excess of drinking we will have. We will get much further if we concentrate on moderation in drinking, eliminate it entirely for drivers of automobiles and for boys and girls of nonvoting age, and tighten control.

Before we can hope for success we must take our heads out of the rain-barrel into which we have been shouting about the return of prohibition, quit reaching for the moon, and settle down to help solve the problems of repeal. If we do not, the wets will solve them to suit themselves.

WALTER WALTON.

"Insult To America."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Congratulations on your editorial in The Post of August 17 concerning the nomination of Hugo Black to the Supreme Court.

I agree wholeheartedly with Senator Copeland, that the nomination of Black is an insult to America. H. B. ROSS.
Washington, Aug. 18.

Position Of Workers Alliance.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am sure that you would not intentionally misrepresent the position of the Workers Alliance of America, as in your editorial on August 19 entitled "March on Washington." I assume, therefore, that it must be the result of a misunderstanding of our position when you declare that the ostensible purpose of the National Job March is to have passed in Congress the Schwellenbach-Allen resolution—which would make necessary immediate employment on WPA of the 8,000,000 unemployed, at a cost of $6,400,000,000.

Upon rereading the resolution we can understand how such a misunderstanding might be created. What has been put into the first paragraph of the resolution is a declaration of policy which we support. That policy is that for those who cannot find employment in private industry work opportunities should be provided through Government agencies. We support this because we believe that the prosperity and welfare of this Nation and its people depend upon its citizens being able to have gainful employment, and if private industry will not or cannot do this job and insists upon permitting many millions of Americans to remain unemployed, then the Government must provide work opportunities and charge the bill to private industry.

However, let me make clear that we are not, in supporting the Schwellenbach-Allen resolution, asking the Federal Government to provide work opportunities for all the unemployed at this time. The immediate legislative goal and the directions to the Works Progress Administration in this resolution are that no WPA worker who cannot find employment in private industry shall be laid off. It further encourages WPA workers to accept temporary employment in private industry by providing for furlough during the period of such employment.

The actual number of people involved in the recent layoff wave is in excess of what your editorial indicates. On April 17, before the wave started, there were 2,085,000 workers on the WPA rolls. Today there are 1,527,000, indicating that 588,000 have already been discharged. According to our understanding of the WPA's plans the rolls will be reduced to 1,463,000 by October 15, making a total layoff of 622,000 WPA workers.

In addition to these, there are 90,000 to 100,000 being laid off from the other parts of the works program which draw their funds just as WPA does from a common pool. Many of these other parts of the works program employ relief workers, just as on WPA.

Thus there is no basis for stating that the cost of our program would be $6,400,000,000. The cost of our program would be determined only on the basis of how many of these hundreds of thousands discharged workers private industry is willing to employ.

May we also take exception to your statement that those laid off should be taken care of by the local communities. Already more than 300,000 families of those discharged have been forced onto the local relief rolls. This is producing an intolerable relief crisis in the localities and is further subjecting hundreds of thousands of American families to relief on the basis of about $20 per month. You have your own experience here in the District, where it is practically impossible for employable people to get relief. The same desperate situation exists in many parts of the country.

Frankly, we are quite puzzled as to what attitude we are expected to take. At the time when our movement was seeking to establish relief for the unemployed we were told that that was un-American and that we should really be concerned about getting jobs. Now when we are seeking for jobs we are told that we should seek for relief.

We are really sorry there has been a misunderstanding about the purposes of the Schwellenbach-Allen resolution or our purpose in coming here. We believe that by the overwhelming support already accorded the resolution, with more than 170 Representatives, some 33 United States Senators and tremendously wide labor and public support, that the passage of this resolution is desired by the American people.

We would be the last to advocate any policy which would spell, as you say, "national bankruptcy," and we believe that your statement that our motives are other than "humanitarian" is without basis. Our sole concern is for the welfare of the 8,000,000 unemployed and their families and the welfare of the American people as a whole.

DAVID LASSER,
National president, Workers Alliance of America.
Washington, Aug. 19.

[The figures used by The Post, to which Mr. Lasser refers, were the latest which could be obtained from the WPA. Spokesmen for that agency insist that it has no plan to cut the number of relief workers to 1,463,000 by October 15.—Editor.]

G. O. P. Convention?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Where is the head of the Republican Party? Has this political organization a directing brain? Or is it a body minus a head?

Mr. Herbert Hoover's suggestion that the G. O. P. hold a convention prior to the elections of 1938 leads one to infer that it is indispensable for the members and organs constituting the body to inform the head what to do. Such a procedure is topsy-turvy. It is the normal function of the head to possess the power of initiative, to conceive ideas, formulate plans and then to issue orders. On the other hand the sole duty of the organs forming the body is to execute and obey those commands. Orders should always descend from the top down and not ascend from the bottom upward.

Such a gathering as the one proposed would lack unity, a knowledge of the principles involved in the major problem now confronting this Nation and would be devoid of real authority. "Too many cooks spoil the broth." The situation would be analogous to a group of a thousand persons all giving advice as to how to bake one cake. That cake would turn out to be an awful mess.

How did the G. O. P. get into such a difficult position? It was caused by selecting weak individuals, mere figureheads as leaders and in the process of time the party has relapsed into the quintessence of mediocrity. Two-thirds of the trouble with that party is to be found in its noncreative and intellectual barren leadership. A good, strong, energetic, efficient, brainy leader is a veritable godsend to any organization. This truth is better understood in Germany than any other country in the world today. The great Napoleon used to say, "An army of asses led by a lion can defeat an army of lions led by an ass." The best thing for the G. O. P. to do is to find the most competent and gifted man within its rank and file, offer him the leadership of the party, and then do what he says. The party can be saved only by using the principle of selecting the best qualified individual for the best place.

In the two preceding Presidential elections the Republican Party used all the political strategy, technique and knowledge accumulated since its origin, without even making a good showing. Common sense should tell that party that to again resort to the use of the same ineffective methods will not bring them victory in 1940. The situation calls for an entirely new brand of politics.

The Soul At Death.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The soul at death goes to God—so believes Mary E. Cunningham. She is wrong, I believe.

Hold your watch in your hand and then think that each time it ticks, in non-Christian lands a person dies without the light of Christ's gospel—100,000 every day, 36,500,000 in a year. A million a month in China die "out of Christ." In China alone, in 150 years, a number of persons equal to the world's present population passes into the "great beyond."

Billions of human beings die without God and without hope. According to your correspondent, these all have immortal souls, and not being Christian are consigned to eternal flames. Does she accept this? JOHN N. QUINN.

Regulating Business.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The apparent defeat of the Administration's wage-hour bill can be attributed primarily to the increasing public resistance to the centralization of power in the Federal Government.

Experiences under the outlawed NRA clearly demonstrated the danger of concentrating enormous power in the government at Washington. Also, it showed the futility and impracticability of trying to regulate all American business, with its great diversity of regional and economic factors. It can't be done successfully.

RUSSELL L. GREENMAN.
Washington, Aug. 18.

Grocery Man

The day a slick young man, full of wisecracks and with pomade all over his hair, came roaring into the house bringing an order from the market and giving unmistakable signs that he expected a dime, I remembered the grocery man who used to let me drive his horse up the hill when I was 5.

As I look back on it now I remember thinking that here was a man who had simply always been. I could not imagine him growing up, but simply a man who always was. He had a close-clipped mustache; he was neither old nor young; he wore a straw hat which was as durable as he, and elastics to keep his shirt-sleeves in place. His wagon was an open affair, with a seat on which there was a slippery, worn leather cushion to which it was always a great feat for me to attach my small person firmly and cling.

The back of the wagon was full of order holders, which were more like cages without any tops than they were like baskets. They were made of a smooth piece of light lumber, worn to a satiny smoothness, and about a foot and a half square; the sides were composed of smooth wooden spindles, fitted at the bottom into the solid wood, and at the top into a wooden rim. They were deep and they held a great deal more in the way of boxes and bags and random bunches of celery, bananas, beet greens, lengths of new clothesline, boxes of starch, English mustard and naphtha soap than you would suppose from their rather inconsequential look.

The grocery man arrived every afternoon at about 4 o'clock. If by chance a message had been sent to him which necessitated an extra trip and he came in the morning, it made the whole day seem fantastic; as if we had had breakfast at night and supper in the morning.

I always went to the bridge to meet him. He drove a great, fat, shining chestnut, lazy horse; the horse knew what I was standing by the bridge for, and stopped without being told. The grocery man would grin and say: "What! You want a ride up the hill?" as if he were surprised, and I had not waited to ride up the hill with him every day but Sunday since I was old enough to be allowed down the hill by myself.

He was a nice man, and he would get down from his slippery leather cushion, put his big, brown hands under my arms and hoist me up with a great "Up you go; my, you're getting heavy!" The horse would turn its lambent eyes around and gaze at me as much as to say: "You understand I don't mind carrying you, up the hill, but I should think you would grow tired of doing it every day."

The grocery man clucked to his horse to move on in a way that I shall never forget, and which cannot be translated into words. It was a very pleasant and amiable sound; it was not strictly necessary, for if ever a horse knew when to start and when to stop, that horse did.

It was the grocery man's fancy to tell me of fantastic things that he had in the wagon for us. Marshmallows made by a big pink cook on the planet of Mars, and an ear of corn that seven men couldn't eat in seven days, and cookies made by Irish fairies and brought across the ocean wrapped in a cloud, and a big golden peach from a queen's orchard. He knew that I did not believe him, but he told his fabrications with charm and solemnity; and one day in church, when he was handing round the plate, as he did every Sunday morning, dressed in elegant black clothes, I caught the sound of the word marshmallow, spoken out of the corner of his mouth, and I knew from the look of sublime warning on his face that I was supposed not to smile, only to remember how wonderful the real marshmallows he had brought me the day before had tasted.

Mr. Evans would lift me down and I was allowed to give the horse a lump of sugar, which he took with much whiffing of his velvet nose and many pleasurable winks from his velvety eyes.

I shall always remember Mr. Evans driving off down the hill after having his daily wrangle with the cook as to whether he had overcharged her or left anything out—which she knew very well he hadn't. A substantial, well-loved figure, who seemed always just to be, like the blue mountains over beyond the river.

If he should ever see the boy who comes crashing in from the market today, thumping packages down on the table and yelling "O. K." when he gets a dime, Mr. Evans would not say a word. But he would not believe his eyes.

Slaves To Brats.

If a poll could be taken of all domestics in the country as to the most objectionable feature of their work, it undoubtedly would prove to be the question of staying with the children when they might otherwise be out having a good time, too, and in the further silliness of being forbidden to punish mamma's little darlings when the little darlings richly deserve it.

They look about at other workers with an eight-hour day or less, and say to themselves: Why should I be slave to the little brats for 16 hours or more? Make no mistake, no matter how much of a darling the child is to the parent, it is merely a brat to the nurse, and especially so to the overworked servant.

Fair Enough

Jimmy Walker's Job.

AS A REWARD for something over 22 years of employment in that which is facetiously known as the public service in New York, Jimmy Walker soon will be eligible for a pension of approximately one-third of his average pay for the last five years of his attachment to the public payrolls.

The pension will be around or about $12,000 a year, toward which he contributed in his time an amount estimated at $16,000. There appears to be some private feeling that Mr. Walker really does not deserve any pension, for he left town abruptly without troubling to explain certain matters which still may be regarded by the captious as unfinished business, and his current employment is looked upon by some as artificial and a political expedient intended only to qualify him for the pension.

Nevertheless, the law and Tammany politics being as they are, Jimmy soon will be eligible for a weekly check of about $240 as long as he lives. He will continue to receive his $240 a week even though he is physically, mentally and professionally able to earn a first-class living at private employment, and this $240 a week will be immune to the Federal income tax.

• • • •

A VERY ATTRACTIVE service, says you. Aye, an elegant service, the service of the public interest (and when you say that, smile), and a fine way to provide against old age. And, although Mr. Walker, for his honest efforts on behalf of his fellow citizens, will be placed among the aristocrats of the pension roll, he may not be top man, even so.

He may be a few dollars under Charles W. Berry, who used to be comptroller at very fair rates of pay and who draws $12,425 a year, free of the Federal tax. Mr. Berry put $25,362 into the pension kitty over the years of his relationship with the public treasury, and it was a grand investment, so it was. He gets it all back in a couple of years of retirement, and above and beyond that the pension is gravy.

John P. O'Brien, who served a short piece as Mayor after Mr. Walker hurried away to suffer and pine on the Riviera and in London, also does very well on his investment. He put in $26,185 and draws $11,899 a year now. Having been retired for three and one-half years, he has already withdrawn all he put into the pot and is now a distinguished guest of the taxpayers at the rate of more than $200 a week.

The late Judge Dan Noble, a Surrogate of Queens, was another who received a fine reward, for he contributed $13,475 and drew a pension of $12,002 for more than seven years. Name me, if you can, another community on earth which equals the gratitude of New York's citizens toward those who draw their pay out of the tax money.

THE FIREMEN, drawing around $3,000 a year, are eligible for retirement after 20 years on half pay, and the policemen may do the same after 25 years. Thus many an able fireman and cop quit the force in the prime of life with a guaranteed income which other workers in private employment in the same salary brackets could not hope to put aside and goes into the job-market in a position to underbid men in need of work to earn a living.

The higher officers of the fire and police departments, of course, draw proportionately higher pensions, but the more they get the less eager they are to retire, which is only natural. Yet those who do retire—and some have retired just in time to avoid the embarrassment of trial and possible loss of all pension rights—often find idleness irksome and take private hire in competition with those who have to pay the taxes to provide their pensions.

Disability or old age is no condition of retirement on pension in New York, and a man who has served, say, five years before observing the handwriting on the wall may step out with an annuity, as steady as the taxpayers' taxes, of one-twelfth of his pay. Not a living, to be sure, but a nice little gratuity from the public to a faithful servant whose task may have been nothing more than to answer the phone in some deputy commissioner's office and say, "He's gone to the Polo Grounds."

There is no sense of scandal over Mr. Walker's pension or the manner in which he has been qualified for it through an appointment about as brazen as anything that Tammany ever has done in town. Oh, there is a little editorial indignation, but the general sentiment, obviously, is that $12,000 a year won't break us, and what if he did do what Seabury said he did? What do you want for a mayor—a reformer?

England Turns To 'Milk Bars' Despite Long Distaste For Liquid in Milk Puddings; Government Rejects Cutforth Plan.

By David Wills.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

London.

THE SODA FOUNTAIN has come to England. It doesn't associate itself with the drug store, but lives an independent and gaudy life in "Milk Bars," which are springing up all over London at a speed which is some indication of the profits to be had. Milk is the principal raw material. Yet the English as a nation do not like milk in its natural form. Athletes at the colleges would shudder to see a jug of milk at table; children have to be told by their mothers that milk is good for them, which apparently makes the children take a life-long objection to the contemptible baby's food.

The dislike is rammed home by that horrible British tradition of dishing up milk puddings, made of rice, sago, tapioca, semolina, macaroni and their kin soaked in milk, sweetened, flavored with nutmeg and baked in an oven until a shudder-provoking skin forms on the top. Even in the ice cream form we have to be persuaded that it is good for us, witness the advertisement slogan flashed on the movie screens: "Ice Cream Is a Food, Not a Fad."

Consumption Of Milk Far Below Ideal Diet.

THE CONSUMPTION of liquid milk per head, or mouth, is far lower than it ought to be; partly because of prejudice, which can be broken down as the success of the milk bars demonstrates, and partly because the price of liquid milk is far too high for the purses of those most in need. The milk industry is organized under government blessing, and with cash subsidies from the treasury, under something like a producers' NRA code which gives benefits to the producers without obligations.

Criticism of the situation is constant, and reports are frequent on production and distribution, the price policy of the sellers, the cleanliness of the milk supplies, the occurrence of tuberculosis in British cattle and so on. In the last 4½ years there have been 14 official reports on milk, to say nothing of the reports by all manner of private organizations. The last, and perhaps the best, report was made last November by a reorganization commission for milk for Great Britain, known as the Cutforth report.

The position is simply stated. Milk producers are organized, under the agricultural marketing act, into milk boards, and the distribution areas of the country are divided into a number of pools. The milk boards are elected by the producers; they have power to fix prices for different classifications of milk and to enter into contracts with distributors for supplies of milk. The price of liquid milk is high, so high that producers find it profitable to increase their production.

The volume of milk given by cows varies with the seasons, and if sufficient cattle are kept to give the necessary milk supply at the poor season, there will be a surplus of about 20 per cent at the more abundant season. Surplus milk is disposed of for cheese, butter, cream, or for manufacture. The high price of liquid milk has for several years stimulated an increased supply; but the high price also prevents an increase in consumption of liquid milk, and therefore diverts a growing volume of milk to manufacture. The price obtainable for this milk is low, so that the more is produced the lower becomes the average price obtained by farmers in any given pool.

But instead of allowing the price of liquid milk to fall, so that consumption may grow, the milk boards, representing milk producers, fight for increased subsidy from the government to compensate them for low prices for manufactured milk. The milk producers have, in fact, increased the price for liquid milk in order to make up for the low price of manufactured milk.

Cutforth Report Made Two Major Recommendations.

THE CUTFORTH REPORT made two fundamental recommendations to cure the absurdities of the existing situation. It proposed that the power to fix wholesale and retail prices of milk should be taken away from the board which represents only the producers, and should be given to a commission appointed by the government to represent producers, distributors and consumers. And, second, it proposed that the liquid milk consumers should pay the cost of disposing for manufacture of only that reserve of milk which is necessarily produced in the season of high yield. The liquid consumer should no longer subsidize the farmers for as much milk as farmers care to produce to sell to manufacturers.

The government has just announced its intentions in a White Paper. Neither of the Cutforth report's proposals is adopted. Power to fix prices is to remain in the hands of the producers, and there is to be no departure from the existing method of making the liquid consumer pay for the raw material of the manufacturer. Economic insanity is not to be cured; as one journal puts it: "To justify an increase in the price of milk for babies by the law price for umbrella handles is the economics of Bedlam. And this is what has been happening under the milk marketing scheme."

We are to continue with this method. The officially approved scale of unemployment relief provides three shillings a week for a child; this amount is not sufficient to buy even the necessary amount of liquid milk, so that children on relief have to be content with condensed milk or skim milk.

The existing power of the producers is even strengthened by the new proposals made by the Government. For the Treasury is to subsidize the milk boards if the price of butter or cheese falls below certain specified limits. And still more cash benefits are to reach the farmers as the result of an attempt to clean up the milk supply which is considered by most critics to be doomed to futility.

More Than 40 Per Cent Of British Cows Tubercular.

OVER 40 PER CENT of British cattle are tubercular. Yet there is no law requiring pasteurization, and no plan to replace the diseased cattle by healthy. With so large a problem to solve, the only reasonable economic remedy would be to replace diseased cattle as they die off or are slaughtered by healthy young cattle in segregated cowsheds and pastures. Apparently all that the government is willing to do is to give a contribution toward a special premium for producers of three grades of clean milk: attested milk, tuberculin tested milk and milk from accredited herds.

And instead of making pasteurization compulsory, power is given for local authorities to apply to the government for an order making pasteurization compulsory in their areas, the order to be suspended for two years after its date of issuing, and exemptions to be granted in a number of specified but undesirable cases. One of the exemptions for example, is the group of producers who obtain milk from a single herd and distribute it themselves; these producer-retailers are frequently very small men whose herds are among those most needing cleaning up.

Minor concessions to the demand that milk should be made cheap for those who need it are the programs of providing cheaper milk for school children, and for children in ill health. But these plans are not sufficiently comprehensive, and in any case are not allowed to make a breach in the fundamental principles upon which the milk boards now operate. Yet a breach in those principles is essential if Britain is to have cheap and clean milk.

Heavy Toll Taken By 3 Stock Blights

By the Associated Press.

Unusually severe outbreaks of three sporadic live stock diseases, Government experts said yesterday, are taking a heavy toll this year of cattle, horses and hogs on farms in the Nation's interior.

The diseases are anthrax, which kills cattle and horses, equine sleeping sickness is fatal to many horses, and swine erysipelas, less fatal, but a serious hog scourge. Dr. Louis Guiltner, Agriculture Department scientist, said outbreaks this season were average.

The sleeping sickness usually is found in areas where mosquitos are numerous.

No Rejections

By

Want to Write for Profit?

I LIKE THE STORY that I heard about the New Yorker the other day—that some wag addressed a postcard to the editor and had it returned with a rejection slip! At the same time, I doubt its veracity. For while there's many a rejection slip between the typewriter and the check, no smart editor is going to return anything without at least having glanced it over. There are too many Mark Twains still in the ink pot; too many Margaret Mitchells hiding their light under a barrel. (In her case, two barrels).

Fortunately, no amount of anecdotes like the one above seems to inhibit the ever-increasing crop of ambitious writers. Two books which have recently come out on the subject seem to tell the whole story in their titles—"Do You Want to Write?" and "Writing for Profit." The first, by Margaret Widdemer, treats more specifically the relationship between a writer and his tools. The second, by Donald Wilhelm, forges the link between the finished product and its market.

Taken together they make a neat little paper trail out of the woods of confusion and rejection slips which, sooner or later, the patient beginner will realize is bounded on the north by book royalties, on the west by pulps, on the south by magazine fiction, and on the east by dozens of offshoots such as radio continuity, newspaper work, syndicates, and advertising copy. But first he must get wise to himself. And to writing.

• • • •

ADVISING PEOPLE what to do and what not to do in writing for publication is so old a tale that it has become as hackneyed as a sophomore's prom line. First of all, you've either got to have something to say or else be a stylist. Since there's only one Stein and not more than half a dozen Joyces making a living from the rose-is-a-rose-is-a-rose design for writing, it seems only humane to direct the sinking tyro to the first life boat which is—have something to say. It's as impossible to become a writer simply by saying "I will be a writer" as it is for a school head to point out a new custom on the campus and declare that "Henceforth this will be a tradition."

"A writer," according to an editorial writer in the London Times Literary Supplement, "is one to whom words are an intuitive means of defining a mental process; an aid to the mind, not an obstruction to it: a disciplined instrument of lucidity." All very pretty, but how, and why, and when? As Miss Widdemer remarks "You can't develop creative instinct if you haven't it. Sense of literary values, if you have creative instinct, you can develop."

In the first place, it's ridiculous to assume that you've got to have any particular background before you can write. Thackeray did travel continuously, but Charlotte Bronte suffered through a stuffy third-rate existence and Katherine Mansfield and Clarence Day both wrote from beds of pain. If you can write at all, you can write where you are. Remember what Montaigne said about that grass-on-the-other side complex—"If you go up to heaven and sit down among the angels, you still are sitting on your own tail." You might not like the acid quality of this wealth-of-the Indies maxim by M. Montaigne, but if you can take it, you'll be a better if not bigger writer.

MR. WILHELM'S BOOK is more virile than that of Miss Widdemer. You get off to a much quicker start with it but whether that start lands you on the printed page depends on your ability to take directions and criticism like a little man. Backing Mr. Wilhelm up in his opinions are such successful writers as Rupert Hughes, Robert H. Davis, Mary Roberts Rinehart, and Owen Davis. Not to forget O. Henry, who once pointed out that "Rule 1 of story writing is to write stories that please yourself. There is no rule II." I have yet to figure out whether such arrogance was due to the fact that he was O. Henry or whether he was O. Henry because of such arrogance.

A careful reading of the Wilhelm book will reveal that it answers every question that can conceivably come to a beginning writer's mind. In it, the author discusses dialogue, plot, suspense, motion picture synopses, interviews, radio copy, characterization and goodness knows what else. And he has done it interestingly and amusingly as well as constructively.

Perhaps the only thing which Mr. Wilhelm doesn't, and can't, account for is public taste. Even Bob Davis, who has kept his finger on the reading public's pulse for lo these many years, simply snorts at the results of his efforts. "How in the world do I know?" he asks, "As surely as an editor buys a story because he needs a filler and runs it over in the back of the magazine, everyone writes in and says it's the best thing in the book!"

But who knows—that filler might be yours!

Such a one is Clyde Brion Davis. On one occasion, he was sent out to cover the departure of a deportation train. He came back with a story about a butterfly. The butterfly, it seems, was a symbol of freedom. Behind the bars of the deportation train was a 10-year-old boy en route to Europe. The butterfly flitted about from cigarette butt to dandelion, and the boy watched him through the bars. That was the story" . . . That may all be well and good, but think what would happen if every reporter sent out on assignment came back with a butterfly lead . . .

Tom McCarthy

En Route to the 'Movie' Capital.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., Aug. 17.—After a while, a passenger left the bus and the sailor was able to move up to the front. That left four of us in the back of the bus bound for Los Angeles. That was several too many for my comfort. The woman with the two children, more or less on her lap, had contrived to fall asleep. She slid sideways along the seat and the head of the salesman on my right nodded into a more comfortable position on my shoulder.

TOM McCARTHY.

I didn't want to wake the woman, so I kept pushing aside the face of the sleeping salesman. He couldn't be awakened and didn't seem to mind at all that, every once in a while, I would plant my hand on his face and guide it toward the sleeper on his right. That was but a stop-gap measure, however, for, like a weather vane in a prevailing wind, his smiling sleep-dulled face would swing about on his spindle neck and slowly come to rest on my shoulder.

Unable to move either to the right or the left, and restricted in my vision to peering straight ahead, I tried to classify the sounds in the bus. I wanted anything to take up time. Classifying sound in a bus full of sleepers is more monotonous than counting sheep. The only way of making it less so is to classify the snores.

• • • •

IT MAY BE said for the salesman that he did not snore. In that respect, he was a gentleman. Moist and fragrant as a breeze from the brew-works, his breath played against the back of my neck. To my left, the valiant lady with the two children compensated for the salesman's silence with a wavering contralto sigh, which gained neither poignancy nor beauty as it pulsated through the back of the bus.

Up ahead, in the comfortable seats, the passengers mingled their contributions in a collective whine, reminiscent of swarming bees. One shrill and anonymous contributor occasionally interjected a reedy, stifled wheeze which, as it persisted, gained the grating resonance of a piece of tin hopelessly involved in the blades of a lawn mower.

Having tired of classifying the snorers in anything but unprintable language, I had to find some new way of passing the night. I began to think about the people you meet on a "bumming trip" across the country, and how the constant stranger finds himself the receptacle of confidences which normally couldn't be extracted by third degree methods.

I began to list some of the casual remarks which I had heard on the trip, many of them revealing flashes of real drama, and all of them comprising a cross section of "the people you meet" when you're on the road. Some of them you would not want to meet again.

HARLAN COUNTY, Kentucky: "They'll try to shoot me in the back"

A tramp in Indiana: "As he ran along beside the box car, I could see that he'd pulled out his brass knuckles. When he grabbed for the car, and tried to pull himself in the door, she was rolling along fast, so I kicked at his hands . . . and he fell off."

A one-time liquor runner, now driving a truck out of Denver: "I saw that I wasn't going to make it. The copper's car was too fast, so I drove over a railroad trestle, on the ties. It tore both the back tires off, but the cops were scared to follow. Naw, I wasn't scared, till it was over."

A young cowboy in Colorado: "That's the picture of the girl I went up to Kansas City to marry last week-end. The wedding was going to be on Monday, but I got drunk Saturday night and she got sore . . . so I walked out."

A truck driver in Colorado: "We put sugar in the gas tanks and it ruined seven motors—fills 'em up like molasses. He won't be firing anybody else in our bunch!"

Two young girls, still in their 'teens, bound for Salt Lake City: "We cracked up the family car, so we're running away. Will you take us on the freight to Salt Lake City?" They were normal children, high school educated and scared out of their wits by their venture. A Colorado State trooper picked them up and saw that they were returned home.

In Orange County, Virginia: "They used to put me in jail every Saturday night, but now they know I'd just as soon live off the county, so they leave me alone."

• • • •

THEN THERE WERE quotations which stuck in my memory because, in a few words they represented the kindness, or the fineness, which you sometimes find in perfect strangers.

A farmer in a Nebraska town: "Hop in, son. I see you've got a knapsack, so I suppose you'd like a ride to the main highway. You'll get a ride there, while you'll never pick one up here in town. It's no more than a mile out of my way."

In a store in Emporia, Kansas: "A man shouldn't be without work that far from home. You wait till I call my brother-in-law, he ought to be able to use a man."

Salem, Virginia: "It's not much out of my way, so I'll drive you to the town line, some of these cops might pick you up for 'thumbing' here in town."

Just about that time, my compilation of quotations was interrupted by a "good morning!" shriek from the blond girl up in front. It was now fully light and awake herself she saw to it that no one else remained asleep.

The passengers who, but a few moments before, had been snoring complacently, twisted in their seats and grumbled, "What a night, I didn't get a wink of sleep."

The bus was roaring down the coast, toward the movie capital of the world. And, press agents to the contrary, it was raining.

Fight to Keep Seat in House Won by Jenks

N. H. Republican Upheld Over Protest of His Opponent.

By the Associated Press.

The House voted 231 to 130 yesterday against removing a New Hampshire Republican whose seat was contested. It ordered the House Elections Committee, which recommended his removal, to report again at the next session.

On the resolution of Representative Wilcox (Democrat), Florida, the committee was instructed to take testimony from 458 residents of Newton, N. H., whose names appeared on election check lists as having voted last election day.

Wilcox told the House the testimony would decide definitely the controversy over the seat held by Representative Jenks (Republican), New Hampshire, who contended 34 Newton ballots cast for him were missing. Only 424 ballots from Newton have been found.

Committee resolutions to unseat Jenks and award his place to the Democratic nominee, Alphonse Roy, were tabled.

Jenks originally was declared winner in New Hampshire's First Congressional District by 550 votes. A recount requested by Roy resulted last November in the first Congressional tie in 110 years, the New Hampshire secretary of State deciding each candidate had received 51,690 votes.

An appeal to the State ballot law commission, final judge in New Hampshire of election disputes, resulted in the election being awarded to Roy by 17 votes December 2.

Ten days later, Jenks requested a rehearing, declaring 34 ballots cast for him were missing from the Newton package. On a review of the controversy, the ballot law commission ordered Jenks seated, declaring him winner by 10 votes.

Roy's protest against Jenks' election was before a House committee for two weeks. Voting, 6 to 3, on party lines, the committee reported last week in favor of removing the Republican.

Knoxville, Tenn., Aug. 19 (AP).—The Tennessee Valley Authority today announced purchase of $2,000,000 worth of turbines for powerhouses on the Tennessee River.

The Baldwin Southwark Corporation, Philadelphia, was awarded a contract for two 36,000 horsepower turbines with governing systems and spare parts for the Chickamauga Dam powerhouse. They will cost $1,049,000.

Red Cross Teaches Swimming to 5,613

The American Red Cross announced 5,613 persons in the District have received swimming instructions this year in the national campaign by the Red Cross to reduce swimming and boating hazards.

"Each year," Gordon Stone, director of first-aid and life saving, explained, "approximately 7,000 persons lose their lives through carelessness and failure to adhere to the simple rules of swimming. Contrary to general belief, half of these fatalities occur in boating."

Stone and two assistants are aided by some 60 volunteer Red Cross life-saving examiners. Their work is carried on at every public pool in or near the District.

Proud Pathologist Offers His Books to Raise Rent Money

New York, Aug. 19 (AP).—A noted pathologist, too old and sick to earn a living, was trying to sell his cherished scientific books today for enough money to pay the rent on the flat, where he lives with his wife, a daughter and two sons, all unemployed.

Writing to Victor Ridder, chairman of the State Board of Social Welfare, 69-year-old Simon Robert Klien, Ph. D. and M. D., said he would not apply for charity because "the Hungarians are a fiercely proud people."

Dr. Klien taught at Fordham University, New York; St. Mary's College, Emmittsburg, Md., and from 1920-28 was chief pathologist at the Norwich (Conn.) State Hospital for the Insane.

Deficiency Bill Omits $210,000 To Buy Armory

Purchase of New Guard Quarters Unlikely Until Next Year.

Postponement of the purchase of a site for a new District National Guard Armory until next year appeared likely last night when the item was left out of the third deficiency bill reported to the Senate.

President Roosevelt had submitted an estimate of $210,000 to buy a site at the foot of East Capitol street last Saturday.

Senator Adams, chairman of the sub-committee on deficiency appropriations, said it was the policy of the committee to eliminate such items for permanent improvements that properly belonged in departmental supply bills.

He admitted, however, that the rule was not rigid nor consistently followed.

The committee inserted the $600,000 item for purchase of a site for a new Naval Hospital and Medical Center as requested by the President.

It also added an item of $5,000 to finance a municipal tax survey authorized in the omnibus District tax act. This estimate was submitted by the Budget Bureau just a few hours before the deficiency bill report was filed.

The minor District deficiency items, it is understood, were left intact by the committee.

House Report Asks Airport in Camp Springs

King Bill Approved and He Releases Bill to Improve Field Here.

The King bill for construction of a commercial airport with $3,286,250 Federal funds at Camp Springs, Md., which has passed the Senate, was favorably reported yesterday by the House Military Affairs Committee after a hurried executive session, attended by Senator William H. King, of Utah, sponsor of the measure.

Following the committee action, Senator King declared he would withdraw his motion to reconsider the Copeland bill for improvement of Washington Airport. Since a similar measure, the May bill, has already been passed by the House, a conference committee may be able to reach a compromise acceptable to both Houses.

Representative Andrew J. May (Democrat), of Kentucky, said an attempt was made yesterday afternoon to get the conference committee together, but that a quorum could not be obtained. He declared that another meeting had been arranged for today.

As a result of yesterday's action, House and Senate leaders expressed the opinion that laws on the two airport proposals may be enacted during the remaining days of the present session of Congress.

The bill for the construction of an airport at Camp Springs has met opposition from the Navy Department, which is building a new radio receiving station at nearby Cheltenham.

The Copeland and May bills, dealing with the improvement of Washington Airport, both provide for the closing of Military road and leasing 53 acres of government land.

U. S. Debt to Pass 37 Billions in Week

By the Associated Press.

The Treasury announcement of new borrowing indicated last night the public debt will pass the $37,000,000,000 mark next week.

The Treasury said it would issue $100,000,000 in discount bills Monday. Of the total, $50,000,000 will be 273-day bills to meet a weekly maturity and $50,000,000 117-day bills to put new money in the cash working balance. The public debt stands now at a record peak of $36,891,415,000.

New York, Aug. 19 (AP).—A 17-ton flying boat bearing Sir Hubert Wilkins, veterans Arctic explorer, headed into the Northwest today on the first leg of an expedition to search for six Russian transpolar fliers who have been missing since Friday.

The flying boat, the Guba, purchased by the Soviet government yesterday and equipped hurridly, took off from Long Island Sound today, paused to refuel at Toronto, then took off again for Port Arthur, Ontario.

2 Held as Embezzlers After Alleged Holdup

Judge John P. McMahon ordered two grocery clerks held for the grand jury under $500 bond on embezzlement charges yesterday after they admitted, the police siad, the story of their being held up Wednesday and robbed of $150 of the store's money was false.

The men, Arthur Scott, 24, of the 600 block of K street northwest, and Lester Jenkins, 22, of Brentwood, Md., were arrested after detectives became suspicious of their story of the robbery.

CONTRACT BRIDGE

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

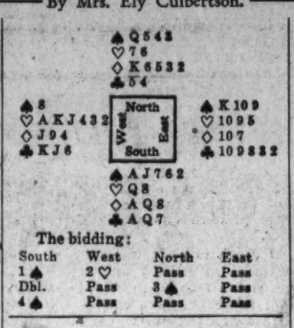

An Intelligent Response.

Good players have a healthy respect for the free bid. The reason is that a free bid, or free raise, by the very logic of the bidding, shows a fair hand. When the opponents have not bid, a player may make a response with a pretty weak hand in order to give his partner another chance. But when an opponent bids, partner is automatically assured of another chance to bid since the auction cannot be terminated until three passes have followed the last bid. A bid in such a situation (called a "free" bid) cannot be made merely to give partner another chance, and should, therefore, be based on some high-card strength. The bidding in the hand above is an interesting extension of this principle.

Neither side vulnerable.

North felt compelled to pass on the first round even though he had a five-card suit and good support for his partner's trump. Many players would have made the mistake of bidding three diamonds, and many more would have made the mistake of raising to two spades. For a free raise, however, North should have had another half honor-trick or a singleton.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	2 ♡	Pass	Pass
Dbl.	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

South properly decided not to let West's overcall go uncontested. His good support for the minor suits and general defensive strength made a double the ideal reopening bid. He was perfectly willing for North to pass for penalties in the event that he had fair strength in hearts; otherwise, he wanted North to bid some suit.

At this point North made a highly intelligent bid. A response of two spades would have been horribly weak, and even a bid of three diamonds would not have indicated the full strength of his hand. His actual bid of three spades showed that with only a shade more he would have raised to two spades on the first round. With this reassurance, South went to game.

The play was simple compared to the bidding. West took two heart tricks and shifted to a diamond. South won in his own hand, and laid down the Ace of trumps. A low trump to the Queen knocked out East's King, and South refused the finesse on the club return. Having lost three tricks, he could not afford to lose a club trick. The club finesse was only a 50 per cent chance, whereas a 3-2 break of the diamonds gave him a 68 per cent chance of eliminating club losers. The rest of the hand was merely a matter of drawing the last trump, and running the diamonds for the discard of the losing clubs.

New Death Linked To Poison Inquiry

Cincinnati, Aug. 19 (AP).—The "mass murder" investigation widened tonight as Mrs. Mary Arnold told police she believed her sister, Mrs. Ollie Luella Koehler, 79, who died today, "was poisoned by Mrs. (Anna) Hahn." A post mortem examination was ordered.

Mrs. Hahn, 31-year-old former housemaid, is under indictment in the deaths of two other elderly Cincinnati residents. She is the central figure in an investigation of at least 11 deaths.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

I heard a $50 bet made that Mr. Roosevelt will run for another term—on the ground that his first two terms won't total quite 8 years, because of the change in inaugural dates . . .

• • • •

• • • •

Many a Senator spends a few minutes sitting in the ailing Norris' seat each day, as if to catch a touch of contagious genius . . . The Senators' desks in the chamber aren't much bigger than the school desks of a sixth grade pupil.

"—gestures are not germaine."

It wouldn't hurt some of the statesmen to take lessons from an actor in oratorical gesturing—as it's said Gen. Pershing once took lessons from a French actor in military demeanor. Most popular senatorial gesture of the day is a short piston stroke forward and back from the tummy, about 4 inches, very modern and streamlined, but proving little, except perhaps great emotion.

• • • •

Among Washington diners-out the cooking at the Egyptian and Turkish Embassies is among the most popular—flavorsome dainties which stick to the ribs . . .

• • • • •

So far no one has tried to enter the galleries of Congress in a bathing suit, but almost every other costume has been worn . . Tourists get an awed peek at one empty room of Justice Brandeis' 3-room suite of offices; he apparently works in the other two.

• • • •

Occasionally Mrs. Senator Caraway prefers the Connally seat next to handsome Senator Thomas, of Oklahoma, to her own seat in the back row . . . She listens intently as he lectures her in an undertone on the intricacies of statecraft.

• • • •

Oddly enough, they miss the late Huey Long occasionally in Washington, where he caused so much alarm. Especially do some of the foreign diplomats regret his passing; they like to cherish his memory (rightly or wrongly) as one who added genuine American uprightness to the scene. "The galleries are duller since he went away," they say.

"—our water front is fishier."

Many of our homegrown statesmen, devoid of un-American lingo, are a trifle embarrassed when a foreigner lapses vivaciously into French or Spanish in relating an anecdote . . . Washington's waterfront smells fishier than waterfronts in most foreign capitals—perhaps because it's the only spot in town with a marked aroma, while foreign capitals treasure a variety of smells.

• • • •

Capital caprices: The rapt, englamoured faces of tourists in the galleries of Congress, as they try to make heads or tails of the debates—with the "So this is the Senate" expression on their faces . . . Dixie came to the fore with bursts of forbidden applause as its orators castigated the lynch bill . . . Senatorial bon mot: "I can't yield the floor to all the beet sugar men at once!"

• • • •

In fact, the Senators twit each other openly about their beet sugar lobby or utility holding company lobby affiliations . . . Senator Minton, of Indiana is another movie hero type, rugged a la Richard Dix . . . There are so many broad-brimmed bonnets on the ladies' pretty heads in the galleries these days that they resemble a mushroom garden . . . Yesterday's impassioned plea by Jenks, of New Hampshire, for his contested seat was the most dramatic tidbit of a dramatic week on the Hill; one feminine Representative was dabbing at her eyes as he finished.

Her condition was serious. The accident occurred at Kansas avenue and Jefferson street northwest, and the injured girl received preliminary treatment from Dr. John DeMayo, of 5039 Kansas avenue.

Edward B. Blade, 55, of 1348 Euclid street northwest, was in a serious condition at Garfield Hospital after being struck by an automobile operated, police said, by James R. No charges were made against Cunningham.

Angelo Miller, 17, colored, of 508 Twenty-fifth street northeast, was treated at Casualty Hospital for lacerations to the right leg. He was injured when the truck in which he was riding collided with an automobile operated, according to police, by John J. Ley, 38, of Wexford, Pa., at Good Hope road and Fendal place southeast. James E. Petterson, 23, colored, was the driver of the truck.

Frank Payne, colored, 49, of 125 G street southwest, was injured slightly when Colanell Stephens, colored, of 807 Second street southwest, backed his car into a parking space in front of the injured man's home. Stephens took the man to Providence Hospital, where he was treated for a sprained left ankle. Police Court assistant corporation counsel will rule on the case today.

Samuel Gordon, 26, of 909 Randolph street northwest, was treated at Emergency Hospital for a bruised left hip after a car he was driving collided with a car said to have been operated by John Farior, of 52 New York avenue northwest. The accident occurred at Thirteenth and M streets northwest.

While the battles of Petersburg were on, Mrs. Annie Bannister Pryor used to walk hand in hand with Gen. Robert E. Lee through the rooms and gardens of Chelsea House, her home near Petersburg, Va. She was 14 years old at the time.

Mrs. Pryor, who died Wednesday at 87 at her home, 2011 Kalorama road northwest, will be buried at 11 a. m. today, and with her will go one of the few ties with the tall white-haired soldier.

She will be buried beside her father, William Constable Bannister, and her brother, Blair, Confederate soldiers who fell in the Civil War.

Many times she rode beside Gen. Lee. After one ride, as she said her bedtime prayers, she sobbed to her mother, "Mother, I just know Gen. Lee thinks we are not going to win this war." Her mother answered, "Of course we cannot win. We are starving."

Mrs. Pryor first saw Gen. Lee at the last rites for a second brother, Norborne. He fell in Grant's siege of Petersburg, and continuing heavy shell fire prevented their burying him in the family plot at Blandford.

At the end of the service Gen. Lee rode away without a word, but next afternoon he returned to the home. From then until the evacuation of Petersburg, Gen. Lee came frequently to visit the Bannister family. Mrs. Pryor frequently sat beside him at mealtime. When her mother was not looking, he would slip his one slice of bacon to her plate.

Mrs. Pryor lived in Washington more than 40 years. Her husband, the late Archibald Campbell, was in the brokerage business for many years. Mrs. Pryor had been a member of the board of governors of the Colonial Dames here.

She leaves her daughters, Mrs. F. Girard Pryor, with whom she lived, and Mrs. Gibbs L. Baker; a son, William Bannister Pryor; six grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

Drought Forces Water Pumping At Hagerstown

Hagerstown, Aug. 19. — The drought finally caught up with Hagerstown, but not until the city had saved several thousand dollars in pumping costs.

For 32 years the city has been accustomed to turn to its emergency water suppiy June 15, which means water must be pumped into its mains. This year heavy rains in June and the first of July filled the city's Edgemont Reservoir to overflowing so the city continued its mountain supply, which is carried here by gravity at no cost.

But this week it had to cut off the reservoir water because a dry month had depleted the supply. Today the 5,000,000 gallons daily consumed here are being pumped from the Potomac River.

A water shortage was reported yesterday in the Pen Mar Resort section. Consumers there have been asked to conserve water during the remainder of the summer. Failing springs, which supply that section, threaten the shortage.

Three Boys Found 'Toppling Indians' After Twelve Days

Chicago, Aug. 19 (AP).—Just as their father thought, the three young Crofoot boys, missing since August 7, were busy today wiping out hostile bands of imaginary Indians around Chicago.

Herbert Fritz, operator of a pony concession, notified police that three boys ordered some fast mounts yesterday, spent an hour toppling redskins into the dust and finally had to be taken off the weary ponies.

Filled with the stories their father, David, told them of his 15 years on an Indian reservation, William, Robert and Jack Crofoot, 14, 11 and 10 years old, respectively, left home 12 days ago to sell homemade candy. They were back home today.

French said five infected Virginia trees had been destroyed and Federal scouting crews had been in the Norfolk area searching for diseased trees since 1934 when the first diseased elm was discovered in the State.

Bruce Attacks Jackson Allies, Hand-Picking of Candidate

Democratic Leader Directs Fight on Lee, Winebrenner in Maryland Gubernatorial Race; Silent on His Aspiration.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cambridge, Md., Aug. 19.—Lashing sharply at E. Brooke Lee and David C. Winebrenner, Democratic leaders of Montgomery and Frederick Counties, respectively, Howard Bruce, Democratic national committeeman from Maryland, tonight in a speech here declared he resented efforts to "hand-pick" a gubernatorial candidate for the party next year.

Admittedly a hostile move toward gubernatorial aspirations of Mayor Howard W. Jackson of Baltimore, Bruce's speech caused surprise because of his candor in mentioning names and especially because of his pointed sallies at Lee and Winebrenner, his former political associates.

Lee and Winebrenner are supporting Jackson for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination. They were lieutenants of Albert C. Ritchie. Bruce also was close to the Ritchie regime, the governor having named him chairman of the State roads commission.

Mentioned as Candidate.

Bruce, one of the richest men in Maryland and president of the Baltimore National Bank, frequently was mentioned as a Democratic gubernatorial possibility before Jackson declared his candidacy last month, with the backing of a number of the former Ritchie leaders. But tonight at a dinner given in his honor here, he made no direct bid for the nomination.

Instead, he named a half-dozen Democrats, including State Senator Lansdale G. Sasscer, who he contended had as much claim to party consideration for the gubernatorial nomination as did Jackson. Others named by him were State Comptroller William S. Gordy, State Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor, State Senator J. Allan Coad, of St. Marys County; Representative Alan Goldsborough, Representative William P. Cole, Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckford, adjutant general of the State, and Dr. Charles H. Conley, of Frederick County.

"Just what is the idea, during the 'dog days' of July, 16 months before election, of trying to force out of the situation these gentlemen, all of whom have performed signal services to the community?" Bruce demanded to know.

"There is resentment against this effort to foreclose the situation at this time, but the greatest resentment is against such an effort being made under the leadership of Brooke Lee, by the same group of politicians who for years fattened on the Ritchie administration," Bruce added.

Shares Resentment.

"I share this resentment; this State does not want a 'hand-picked' Governor. We are today suffering from too much 'hand-picking' of individuals for public office.

"While upon the subject of the defeat of Gov. Ritchie, let no one think that the voters of this State were unappreciative of Gov. Ritchie's services. There may have been in certain quarters party treachery, but there were also many conscientious voters who voted not against Ritchie, but against the clique with which, unfortunately, he permitted himself to be surrounded.

"The foremost illustrations that come to me are Maj. Brooke Lee and Mr. David Winebrenner.

"Maj. Lee, during his dominance of the State roads commission, managed to make about as complete a mess of the affairs of the commission as could possibly be made. It has always been my reasoned opinion that his roads commission activities plus his prominent position in the Ritchie regime did about as much as any one thing to pull down the roof on Gov. Ritchie's head."

Bruce contended Jackson is already "boss of what is publicly regarded as the Baltimore City organization." He pointed out that the counties of Maryland had "not had a Governor for nearly 20 years, yet we are asked again to name another Baltimore City man." He said he would not raise an issue based on sectionalism, but that he did not believe the State as well as Baltimore should be politically dominated by one man.

Fears Oligarchy Rule.

"There has recently been gathered together a group of officeholders, 'would be' officeholders and 'has been' leaders, with Maj. Lee as field marshal, and they now propose to turn over to Mr. Jackson the control of the State government of Maryland," he asserted and added, "if he is, not now the political boss of Baltimore giving him the governorship will certainly make him such. And there will, as the night follows the day, be set up in Maryland a political oligarchy which will hold the State in its grasp for years to come."

Bruce prefaced his speech with criticism of the fiscal condition of Maryland's government under Gov. Harry W. Nice, Republican, comparing it with the Ritchie record. He particarly criticized activities of the present State road commission. He declared that the present situation called for "a drastic overhauling" and that the responsibility rested on the Democrats, since they constituted the dominant party of the State.

He said he had no resentment against Jackson for seeking the governorship and that "his ambition is a natural and laudable one." But he held that Jackson's strength "has been exaggerated by every ingenuity known to man" and that "with the aid of ten secretaries and a horde of officeholders, one can make a considerable showing for a time."

Rumor Revived Duke of Windsor Seeking Va. Home

Warrenton, Va., Aug. 19 (AP).—An unconfirmed rumor that the Duke of Windsor might purchase the 1,200-acre North Wales Club here for a Virginia home gained strength today upon the statement of Club President Robert C. Winmill that "somebody has been nosing around lately wtih offers for the place."

"It might be the Duke of Windsor or it might be anybody," he said, declaring that he did not know the name of the prospective buyer and could not reveal the name of the agent.

Reports that the abdicated monarch might come to live in either Maryland or Virginia were first discussed here when he left the throne in order to marry Wallis Warfield Simpson.

The duke and duchess have made no statement of intention to reside in the United States.

D. C. Heads Split on Aid For Jobless

Allen Favors New Item of $1,225,000 in Welfare Funds.

Hazen Unable to Find Money; Answer Is With Sultan.

A controversy among District Commissioners over the question of a $1,225,000 appropriation for the jobless broke into the open yesterday.

Commissioner George Allen came out in favor of upholding the Welfare Department's budget request for that amount. Earlier, Commissioner Hazen had demanded it be cut.

This leaves the answer to Commissioner Dan Sultan, who was on vacation yesterday. It is expected he will lean toward Allen's views.

Entirely New Request.

The welfare request is for the second largest single item so far listed with the District for submission to Congress. It was an entirely new demand. Heretofore no money has been appropriated here for employables out of work.

The Welfare Department pointed out that many thousands who were once employed by WPA and other Federal projects are now unable to find jobs.

Hazen Unable to Find Funds.

Hazen said he did not see where the money could come from. The School Board not long ago increased its request 50 per cent, which was followed shortly by a 63 per cent increase demanded by the Welfare Department.

In past years it has been customary for the public assistance division to deny aid to anyone able to work, whether the applicant was in distress or not. The division has used all its funds for persons physically unable to work.

Several civic groups have already announced their support of the Welfare Department's request.

Birthday Party Dispels Libels Against 'C. B.'

De Mille, as Honor Guest, Refutes Ancient Legend of His Aloofness.

By the United Press Hollywood Correspondent.

Hollywood, Calif., Aug. 19.—Cecil B. de Mille celebrated his fifty-sixth birthday the other day with a party which somehow seemed to dispel the 1,001 libels which have grown around his name.

He has been called glorifier of the marble bath tub; the rewriter of the Bible; the thrower of tantrums terrific. Most of the "yes" man yarns involve him. Hollywood wisecrackers nearly always mention the great De Mille.

Yet there he was on the Paramount lot, working calmly on the film, "The Buccaneer," and even taking in high good humor the arrival of the only "yes" man for miles around. The latter consisted of a green and sassy parrot which has been trained by a couple of pranksters to say—and say yet again:

"Yes, Mr. de Mille."

De Mille's only eccentricities are his knee-high boots. He got 'em years ago when boots were considered part of any director's uniform. He wore them so long that if he were to take them off now he'd feel undressed.

A Creole Luncheon.

He worked all morning directing Fredric March and his gang of pirates in a dramatization of the life of Jean Lafitte, the Louisiana badman. At 1 p. m. he knocked off for an hour to celebrate his birthday with a creole luncheon in the Paramount dining room. There were 300 guests and a menu consisting of gumbo soup, jambalayah, salad, corn bread, yam pudding and a birthday cake, forwarded by Gov. Richard W. Leche of New Orleans.

The baldish De Mille, dressed in a brown suit and subdued tie of maroon, ate lightly, listened to speeches by Adolph Zukor and other greats of the movie business, and then got up to say "Thanks."

He spoke gracefully for a few minutes, mentioned "the artistic banana peels" upon which he had slipped and announced:

"Talking about business—lunch is over. Anybody who's late on the set is fired, immediately." He smiled when he said it, but March, Franciska Gaal, Akim Tamiroff, Beulah Bondi and all the other members of the cast scrammed—and that's the word—to Stage 14.

Bayou Rises.

There, the bayou home of Lafitte had risen, with cannon facing the ocean, loot from pirated vessels comprising the furnishings, and Lafitte himself (March) lolling on a velvet hammock, smoking a cigar, and playing with a white cockatoo, which had a yellow comb, and a blue bill.

This bird, like all the other actors on the set, had a double, for the tedious sequences. One of the fowls was silent; the other squawked until the sound effect man had to turn his dials down.

De Mille worked quietly, squinting through the camera at each scene, placing all the actors just so, and giving instructions in a voice no louder than that O, say, President Roosevelt at a press conference.

Wherever De Mille went his blonde secretary, in green glasses, black satin waist, white skirt and spike-heeled shoes, went too. Every word he said to anybody, she jotted down in shorthand. That was to forestall alibis. Nobody can tell De Mille he has forgotten anything. He has the record, always handy.

The De Mille Legends.

One of the best of the De Mille legends concerns a lovely $2,000 Chinese vase, an important part of a movie set. De Mille went to the loud speaker and delivered a lecture to his actors, telling what a valuable antique it was and for goodness sake, not to break it. Then he turned around to walk away—and accidentally knocked the vase into a million slivers.

Another bit of De Mille lore has to do with the two extras who insisted upon whispering, after he had demanded silence. He finally told one of them that if what she had to say was more important than his own words, she'd better repeat her conversation to the whole company. She refused, but De Mille insisted. To the microphone she went finally, and said in a small voice:

"I was just asking Mazie when that bald-headed geezer'd call lunch!"

There probably isn't much truth in either of these yarns, but De Mille laughs dutifully whenever he hears them.

'The Life of Emile Zola' Will Open Road Show Engagement at the National Theater Thursday

By Gerald G. Gross

Substituting for Nelson B. Bell.

"THE LIFE OF EMILE ZOLA," Paul Muni's latest excursion into the realm of biography, will light the marquee of the National Theater for a limited engagement beginning Thursday, the local Warner offices announced yesterday.

Washington gets this eagerly awaited screen dramatization of the lives of Zola and Dreyfus just two weeks after its triumphant opening in New York, where it is being continued at the Hollywood Theater as a road show attraction.

Here, too, "Zola" will be played on a two-a-day basis, afternoon and evening performances daily, with seats going on sale at the National box office on Monday.

The picture, whose star won the Academy Award for his performance as Louis Pasteur, has been enthusiastically acclaimed by New York critics. Writing last Sunday in the New York Times, Frank S. Nugent said:

"It is historically accurate (granting every dramatist reasonable license); it is dramatically vibrant; it is magnificently played; it is handsomely produced; it is eloquently written. It is, in a very real sense, as timeless as the material it employes, as the theme it treats."

Thousands are in the cast, whose featured players are Gale Sondergaard, Academy Award winner as last season's best supporting screen actress; Joseph Schildkraut, as Dreyfus (Miss Sondergaard is Mme. Dreyfus); Gloria Holden, as Mme. Zola; Donald Crisp, Erin O'Brien-Moore, Henry O'Neill, Morris Carnovsky, Louis Calhern, John Litel, Robert Barrat, Grant Mitchell and Ralph Morgan.

William Dieterle, who did the same for "Louis Pasteur," directed "The Life of Emile Zola" and Tony Gaudio, another Academy Award winner, had charge of the cameras. The scenario is by Norman Reilly Raine, Heinz Herald and Geza Herczeg.

The regular legitimate season at the National opens September 13, according to present bookings, with "Brother Rat," the current New York hit.

Mark up another scoop for Gene Ford. Helen Greene will be a member of the "Going Native" cast when that all-local revue opens today at Loew's Capitol. Aye, the same Helen who was chosen as "Miss Washington" Wednesday night to compete for the "Miss America" beauty crown in Atlantic City. Besides comeliness and personality, Miss Greene is said to boast a pleasing voice, which will be heard in several song numbers. Miss Greene is 24, weighs 119, is 5 feet 5 and lives at 2301 Cathedral avenue. At final rehearsals yesterday, Producer Ford and Dance Director Harry Crosley expressed their pleasure over the routines of the 60 young performers, the former going so far as to say that this year's talent crop is the best of all.

If you have tears, prepare to shed them the week beginning next Friday, when Kay Francis and "Confession" come to the Earle. Projected across a preview screen yesterday, "Confession" unreeled itself as a good old-fashioned tear-jerker about a guy who done a gal wrong. The theme may not be a novel one, but it really is news to see the usually immaculate and chic dressed Miss Francis wearing a blonde wig, a tight skirt and a bag under each eye.

Of course, she doesn't go on looking like that throughout the picture, only in the more dramatic sequences. And "Confession" abounds in these, concerned as it is with the plight of a woman who shoots the pianist who betrayed her because he has intentions of doing the same to her daughter.

When Vera (Kay Francis) takes the witness stand in her own defense and reluctantly tells her story on condition that the court shall withhold from the daughter the identity of her real mother, one may be forgiven if his mind harks back to "Madame X."

But, getting back once more to the novel and distinctive, Joe May's direction is that and more. Symbolic tid-bits inserted here and there, skilful montage photography and, above all, the director's clever pacing of a story which might have lagged in less capable hands—these, plus good performances by Miss Francis, Basil Rathbone, Jane Bryan and Donald Crisp make "Confession," which nearly all women and some men will enjoy a lot.

For all its thrills and excitement, the most perilous part of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson's expedition to Borneo to make the picture of that name, opening at Keith's today, found no place in the film. On the long 900-mile aerial trail from Singapore to Sandakan, the couple traversed the southern part of the China Sea, in that area of uncertain weather and treacherous winds which witnessed the end of the brilliant flying career of Sir Charles Kingsford-Smith. A single-engined Sikorsky, however, carried them safely to their destination. Pilot James Laneri had to be his own aerologist and mechanic.

Dorothea Lewis sits down to a typewriter and sends this desk an interesting account of her visit last week-end to Day Tuttle and Dick Skinner and their two summer theaters in Mount Kisco, N. Y., and Westport, Conn. So, plucking a paragraph here and there:

"We drove up to the Westchester Playhouse, at Mount Kisco, to see one show, 'The Virginian,' with Henry Fonda, but when we returned we had seen three shows and one dress rehearsal. Pretty good for a week-end? You might care about the 'true story' of Fonda's accident.

"His nag saw an automobile and didn't like it and ran straight into it, breaking the windshield with his front hooves and throwing Hank right over the car . . . When the driver discovered that it was a full-fledged movie star who had hurtled over the car, she decided to sue—although Fonda immediately offered to pay every cent of the damages. What he minds most are the cracks being made about his horsemanship."

(There is more to this 'true story' than that, but space exigencies do not permit narration of all the gruesome details.)

"The Washington Civic Theater is pretty proud of all its members who have been busy at Kisco and at the other Tuttle-Skinner theater at Westport. In addition to Harry Bratsburg, the "Virginian" cast also includes Ruth Perrott of the Civic.

"We raced over to Westport to see Anna May Wong, Vincent Price and McKay Morris in 'Princess Turandot' and laughed till we ached. Two Civickers were also in that—Rachel Sewall and Ted Tenley . . . The Turandot audience included Miriam Hopkins, Mady Christians and Phillips Holmes, in addition to nearly all Westport."

Miss Lewis writes lots more but, unfortunately, it will have to wait.

Hollywood's ego is due to undergo a little "death in the afternoon" at the hands of Ernest Hemingway next Wednesday night when "The Spanish Earth" is previewed in the Press Club auditorium under auspices of the National Press Club. Hemingway did the narration for this film gratis, while continuing to spurn West Coast offers to do the same chore for other pictures at a large salary. Wednesday's screening audience will consist of newspaper correspondents, members of Congress, civic heads and diplomats. A story of life and people in a war-torn Spanish town, "The Spanish Earth" has no professional players and all settings and scenery are the real thing. It has never been shown publicly in Washington, though President Roosevelt saw it in the White House earlier this year.

Odds and ends, here and away: Rehearsals for "Madame Bovary," opening play of the local Theater Guild season, will begin September 6 . . . this production, featuring Constance Cummings, is scheduled to make its debut October 4 . . . "On With the Dance" yesterday was announced as the title of the George Raft starring picture previously known as "Argentine Love" . . . the National Screen Council voted "Wee Willie Winkie" the best picture of the month . . . hot weather is proving a bonanza for the S. S. Potomac, what with thousands of folks seeking to escape the heat embarking for Colonial Beach or moonlight cruises . . . Walter Wanger's "Vogues of 1938" had a gala opening in New York's Music Hall yesterday . . . J. Francis Buckley, director of "A Man Who Married a Dumb Wife," which the F. B. I. theater group will give in the Sylvan Theater Tuesday night, has been a member of the company since its inception . . . Gene Raymond will be Lily Pons' leading man in her next RKO-Radio picture, "It Never Happened Before," just as he was in "That Girl From Paris" . . . Glen Echo Park yesterday had the biggest crowd in its history, with 6,000 entering the swimming pool and 12,000 Capital Transit Employes Relief Association members and their families enjoying themselves.

Osa and Her "Borneo" Pets

Mrs. Osa Johnson went in for mascots in a big way while she and her late husband, Osa Johnson, were filming "Borneo," the exciting animal and adventure picture which comes to RKO-Keith's today. Johnson had just finished editing the film when he was killed in an airplane crash several months ago.

Idol chatter: A Los Angeles city ordinance bans professional fortune-tellers, but plenty of people make a living by exposing stars' pasts. JOHN GILBERT.

The only thing more caustic than Marion Davies' impersonation of Katharine Hepburn is Katharine Hepburn's impersonation of Marion Davies. Passing thought: WHAT an Iceman was lost to the world when Clark Gable became a movie star! I am not superstitious—but it is strange that not one of Charlie Chaplin's and Harold Lloyd's many leading ladies is on the screen today. Interviewers' Nemesis: Fred Astaire, who always retracts tomorrow the statement he made yesterday and regrets today. Wonder why movie villains are always such rotten shots and screen heroes are such swell marksmen?

Ameche is the Italian for friend, and, come to think of it, I have never heard Don say an unkind word about anyone. One thing that always amazes me is the ethereal beauty of June Collyer. Warning to Hollywood hostesses: Invite Leslie Howard for 6 if you want him there at 8—he is always tardy. I can never relax around Joan Crawford—she is too electric. W. C. Fields calls the gateman at Paramount "Bad Check" because he used to be a bouncer.

You rarely see Jeanette MacDonald without one of her assorted pedigreed pooches. Wherever she goes, one of her dogs goes with her, to caper at her heels when she walks and lie at her feet while she rests, staring up at her with dumb devotion. Captain, her famous English sheep dog—an aristocrat that won blue ribbons in countless shows—developed a cantankerous disposition in his old age and bit so many people that Jeanette finally had to exile him to a farm in San Fernando valley. Knowing how much he enjoyed automobile rides, she paid him three or four visits a week and took him for long jaunts in her car. He died the other day—and I've never seen anyone grieve more for a departed friend than did Jeanette when she learned of his death.

There is one stage on every studio lot that the casual visitor never sees. On it, with the aid of a bewildering collection of mechanical devices, are filmed "process" shots—trick effects that Hollywood regards as professional secrets. Today, I dodged the gargoyle that guards the holy of holies on the M.-G.-M. lot and watched the shooting of a waterfront scene. In the foreground, moored to a pier, was a motor boat that bobbed and heaved on its rockers. In it sat the actors, emoting and fighting seasickness, and behind them, on a huge screen, was a movie of Long Island Sound, with its heavy water traffic. When you see that scene on the screen, you will be willing to swear that it was filmed on the actual location. Every day, Hollywood is becoming more dependent upon trickery.

The most amazing example in screen history was "Captain Blood." Thanks to the magic of the "process" men, that sea-epic was filmed without a single scene being taken on the ocean.

The camera tricks used today remind me, by contrast, of Erich von Stroheim, high-priest of realism—and the hardships that Jean Hersholt suffered 13 years ago, during the filming of "Creed." Von Stroheim took the company into Death Valley in the summer and they lived for weeks in that desolate hell, with the thermometer reaching 160 degrees at midday. They shot for six days to get one scene of Jean chasing a mule—and the mule died on the sixth day. Jean and Gibson Gowland, the heavy, were blistered from sunburn, and Jean had a raging fever, but Von, a hollow-eyed maniac armed with a big revolver, made them stage their big fight scene on a salt bed. The salt burned their raw flesh like fire—and Jean, delirous picked up a tent stake and tried to kill his tormentor. A property man overpowered him.

New York, Aug. 19.

FAME: Toto has been the greatest clown in the world for the last 20 years. During that period he has entertained every crowned head in the world . . . Only three years ago Toto made a command performance before the King and Queen of England. But a new day has dawned . . . A few weeks ago Toto got a job at a little place in Mamaroneck—a job as host . . . at the Green Tavern Inn there.

SWANK: Moss Hart, who just purchased a Pennsylvania homestead, was describing its virtues. "And besides," Hart enthused, "the place has 87 acres of ground" . . . "Why such a big place?" he was asked. "Don't you like being near neighbors?" . . . "It isn't that," Hart explained. "It's just that I am passionately fond of eating onions!"

AMBITION: In the new issue of Billboard, a column called "The Broadway Beat"—which relates gossip of Times Square—is written by a young man named Maurice Zolotow. Six months ago he was a student at the University of Wisconsin. And his final school thesis was entitled: "The Influence of Catholicism on Modern Literature."

OPPORTUNITY: Dennis Moore was brought to Hollywood recently to appear in the new Marlene Dietrich picture, "Angel" . . . When the cast went on location and the day's work completed, the democratic Miss Moore—although a featured actress—joined the extras at the common lunch wagon, instead of being served at the stars' table, to which her rank entitled her . . . Dietrich noticed this incongruous sight and complimented Dennis upon her sagacity. "It is a good publicity idea," the star agreed—and turned to Lubitsch. "Come, Ernst," directed, "call the photographers" . . . And that's why, when "Angel" is released, the publicity photos will show Marlene Dietrich suddenly becomes democratic—lunching with the extras at their table.

COMPROMISE: Oscar Levant, the pianist-composer who now is in Hollywood, phoned his friends the George S. Kaufmans—who insisted that he return to New York . . . while Levant declared that he'd continue to remain in Hollywood . . . "Tell you what I'll do," he proposed, "I'll meet you half way" . . . "You mean," they asked, "you'll meet us in Kansas City?" . . . "Oh, no," Levant explained, "I mean—you pay half my fare" . . . The arrangement was agreed upon—and Levant is on his way East.

CELEBRATION: A firm of Broadway producers, now producing operettas at one of the bathing resorts, recently invited the drama critics to be their dinner guests at a summer cafe near New Rochelle . . . Menus were placed into their hands, and the critics noted that these menus were remarkably short—in fact, listing only the $1.75 dinner . . . From those menus had been cut the $2 dinner, the $2.50 dinner and the $3 complete shore dinner!

PROWESS: Harpo Marx met Marjorie Leibowitz, daughter of Attorney Sam Leibowitz, and was asked by her to whistle—as he had done in "A Day at the Races." Harpo emitted a long, shrill whistle . . . Countess di Frasso, the former Mrs. Graham-White, is on the same boat, while Ethel Levey sails on the Acquitania. It sounds complicated—but there it is . . . Jack Connelly, former head of Pathe Newsreels, will open 50 newsreel theaters throughout America. Eighteen of them will be in the New York sector. His partner will be Cortlandt Smith . . . Henry Fonda, now playing in "The Virginians," at Mount Kisco, sustained severe injuries last Thursday. He went horseback riding in Westchester—and rode his horse into a car!

SAFETY: Dick Merrill's plane bears unusual decorations inflicted by hero-worshipers. These carvings are of girls' names, telephone numbers and messages. When Merrill flew to California to appear in his first film venture, the police department there assigned two policemen to guard against anyone carving through the plane's covering . . . When Merrill arrived at the flying field he found one 250-pound cop still holding a jackknife, and eminently pleased at his success in carving his signature—right smack over the main right gas tank.

ANGER: Chamberlain Brown is interviewing actors anxious to appear in the new Talullah Bankhead play. Last week a young, tanned lady entered Brown's office, asked to see him and was directed to wait . . . After two hours she told the receptionist that she could wait no longer. "But you have to wait," the receptionist stated, "that is, if you want a job in the Bankhead play" . . . "I don't want a job in the Bankhead play," the tanned star informed. "I am Bankhead!"

The well-established military axiom that the foot soldier is the only effective unity for taking and holding ground, so frequently invoked against proponents of aviation, apparently works out so well in the matter of taking jungle pictures. Although Osa Johnson and her late husband, Martin Johnson, found their airplane a useful means of reaching relatively inaccessible spots during their last exploration trip, in Borneo, a comparatively few feet of the final film record of that exciting venture was made from the air. Practically the entire picture was filmed by hiking or canoeing to the desired places.

In their previous expeditions into Africa, the Johnsons found the broad, flat, sparsely wooded areas of the central plains well-suited to aerial photography. Herds of animals, startled at the noise of the plane, made striking film subjects, easily photographed at close range because of the freedom from obstruction to flying.

But in Borneo, the densely wooded banks of the meandering Kinibatanaan River, whose upper reaches was the locale of the work the exploring party found opportunity for aerial pictures only in making a few isolated terrain views of the general area.

Oddly enough, the rare spectacle of a winged amphibian seemed to arouse no misgivings in the minds of the natives, although they had, for the most part, known of airplanes only through stories. A lively, and at times embarrassing curiosity seemed to them their chief reaction. Capt. James Laneri was forced to remain constantly on the alert lest a too-curious native boat crew ram the anchored aircraft with a dugout, which would have meant serious damage to a wing or float.

The last safari made by the famous couple, whose joint adventuring was brought to untimely end when Martin Johnson was killed in an airliner crash in California, is recorded in "Borneo," coming to RKO-Keith's today.

With numerous sound recordings made in Borneo, the picture has supplementary narration by Lowell Thomas and Lew Lehr

Two Film Hits Today Usher in Loew's Season

Imposing List of Pictures Headed for Palace, Capitol and Columbia.

The approach of fall is significant in many respects, the most outstanding being that it marks the advent of a new entertainment season.

It is a general practice for the major motion picture producers in Hollywood to announce in late August or early September their production schedule for the next 12 months. In the majority of cases they begin the new season with a series of outstanding pictures which are backed by extensive advertising and publicity campaigns.

The local Loew theaters, the Capitol, Palace and Columbia, today inaugurate their new movie season—and a more imposing season has never loomed for local filmgoers. The official opening gun of the new season will be the magical musical "Broadway Melody of 1938" at Loew's Palace and "Wee Willie Winkie," plus the "Going Native" all-local revue, at the Capitol.

"Broadway Melody of 1938" is one of the most imposing of the many star-spangled musical comedies produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Eleanor Powell and Robert Taylor are billed as the stars of this lavish extravaganza, but the cast teems with the names of sparkling personalities. Included are George Murphy, new singing and dancing sensation and the first dancing partner Eleanor Powell has ever had; Sophie Tucker, Willie Howard, Robert Benchley, Buddy Ebsen, little Judy Garland, Binnie Barnes, Charles Igor Gorin and some of the loveliest lassies ever to grace a chorus.

Many Hits on Way.

"Wee Willie Winkie" is that dramatic Kipling story of the Kyber Pass, where the Bengal Lancers go into action. And it is action, drama, intrigue and entertainment such as no previous Shirley Temple picture has offered. Victor McLaglen, C. Aubrey Smith, Michale Whalen, June Lang and many others contribute memorable performances in one of the year's finest pictures.

The accompanying stage show, "Going Native," will present 60 of Washington's most talented aspirants for entertainment greatdom in a show that is annually applauded as being among the finest diversions offered Washington. And thus local moviegoers are presented with a triple-threat new movie season that should surely whet the appetite for the succession of outstanding hits ahead.

To come along with rapidity will be these attractions:

"Prisoner of Zenda," starring Ronald Colman, Madeliene Carroll, Douglas Fairbanks, jr., C. Aubrey Smith, Mary Astor and David Niven, will head a series of releases from United Artists which includes "Stella Dallas," the Goldwyn production, with John Boles and Barbara Stanwyck in a picture that every woman will want every man to see; "Dead End," based on the sensational New York stage hit, with Joel McCrea, Sylvia Sidney, the original "kids" from the stage play, Humphrey Bogart, Allen Jenkins and others.

The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios will contribute, besides "Broadway Melody of 1938," the new Joan Crawford picture, "The Bride Wore Red," with her two leading men being Franchot Tone and Robert Young (remember him in "I Met Him in Paris"). Billie Burke and Reginald Owen are also in the cast.

Garbo and Boyer Teamed.

Also Spencer Tracy and Luise Rainer will be seen in a picture of modern times called "Big City," with Charley Grapewin and Victor Varconin in support. In "Conquest," also from M-G-M, Greta Garbo will have a new screen lover in Charles Boyer. Boyer plays the part of Napoleon and Garbo is the girl that won, then lost, his love in this vivid romance of intrigue that has been produced on a lavish scale. Reginald Owen and Henry Stephenson are among prominent supporting players.

After a brief absence from the screen, William Powell and Myrna Loy make a happy return in "Double Wedding," a farce of the highest ranking order, with John Beal, Florence Rice and Jessie Ralph contributing to the merriment of this truly happy hit. Then to follow will be such pictures as "Madame X," with Gladys George, Warren William and John Beal; "Live, Love and Learn," with Robert Montgomery, Rosalind Russell and others; "Rosalie," with Nelson Eddy and Eleanor Powell; "Swing Fever," with Judy Garland and Allan Jones;" Clark Gable, in "Test Pilot;" "Bad Man of Brimstone," with Wally Beery and Virginia Bruce; Edward G. Robinson in "The Last Gangster," his first picture for M-G-M; "Vogues of 1938," with Warner Baxter and Joan Bennett; "Nothing Sacred," with Carole Lombard and Fredric March; Leslie Howard and Joan Blondell in "Stand-In;" Bing Crosby in "Double or Nothing;" Shirley Temple in "Heidi;" Irene Dunne and Randolph Scott in "High, Wide and Handsome," and many, many more from the studios of M-G-M, United Artists, Twentieth Century Fox, which the Loew houses here play exclusively, and a pick of pictures from the Paramount lots.

It's going to be a notable season that's starting today at Loew's, and a most promising one for all Washington movie fans.

Returns to Screen.

Walter Pidgeon is one of the few leading men in Hollywood who was in pictures ten years ago. He left the screen to return to Broadway and starring stage roles. Now he is making his re-appearance as a screen leading man in "My Dear Miss Aldrich."

Pete's 'Tarzan' Yell.

Birthplace Location.

Virginia Grey was born about ten minutes' drive from the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, where she is now appearing in "Rosalie," co-starring Eleanor Powell and Nelson Eddy.

Chocolate Bar Breakfast.

First thing every morning, even before he gets out of bed or has his coffee, James Stewart eats a bar of chocolate. He claims that this is an ideal breakfast.

First Musical Role.

Edna May Oliver, who planned a career of music, gets her first chance to appear in a musical by portraying the queen in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's 'Rosalie," co-starring Eleanor Powell and Nelson Eddy.

Tender Moment in 'Stella Dallas'

United Artists studio believes that every woman will want every man to see "Stella Dallas," a heart-stirring story whose principal players are Barbara Stanwyck and John Boles, shown above. Anne Shirley plays the second feminine lead in this 1937 version of the well-known play.

Shirley Temple In New Phase Of Her Career

Dramatic Role in "Wee Willie Winkie" Different From Others.

Marking the beginning of a new phase in Shirley Temple's screen career, "Wee Willie Winkie," the famous Rudyard Kipling story of India, opens today at Loew's Capitol Theater. The spectacular Twentieth Century-Fox drama was directed by Academy Award winner John Ford.

The curlyheaded child star, who has been acclaimed as the No. 1 boxoffice attraction of both America and England, has a highly dramatic role, the strongest supporting cast of any of her screen successes, and the most elaborate production yet accorded one of her films.

Shirley's co-star in "Wee Willie Winkie" is Victor McLaglen, himself an Academy Award winner, and the supporting cast includes C. Aubrey Smith, June Lang, Michael Whalen, Cesar Romero, Constance Collier and young Douglas Scott, among many others.

For the production, two Indian forts were constructed at a location site 35 miles from the studio. One is a native fort and the other headquarters for a Highlander regiment recruited and trained for action in the picture. Numerous scenes required the use of many hundreds of extras, and for one eye-filling sequence the colorful native life of Peshawar, India, was reproduced, even to camel caravans and elephants with tapestried howdahs.

Production chief, Darryl F. Zanuck, who personally supervised all phases of preparation for this important film, named Gene Markey as associate producer. Ernest Pascal and Julien Josephson wrote the screen play from Kipling's original story—one of the most famous stories in the world.

'Thin Man' Is Portrait Painter (?) Now

This slightly cuckoo scene from "Double Wedding," which will come along in the course of Loew's new movie season, undoubtedly is in keeping with the balmy character of the latest William Powell-Myrna Loy costarring picture. Mr. Powell, in his horizontal stripes, seems quite intent upon posing Miss Loy, who is probably wondering whether to humor him or obey that impulse and shout for help. "Double Wedding" is the comedy upon which Powell interrupted his work when Jean Harlow died.

'Swining In The Rain' Was a Trying Feat for Two Tapsters.

Not so long ago it used to be "Singing in the Rain," but with the advance of time the modern trend has changed it to "Swinging in the Rain."

Eight years ago when the first "Broadway Melody" was filmed, Cliff Edwards donned a raincoat and sang in the rain. Now Eleanor Powell and George Murphy in "Broadway Melody of 1938" come along and go him one better, for they swing in the rain, without wearing raincoats.

The players cover more than two acres of land while doing the dance. When it begins, the sun is shining and they dance to the tune of "Feelin' Like a Million," but in the middle of the dance, the rain begins to fall. They rush to a pavilion and continue, but rush out into the rain again.

Jumping from puddle to puddle, they dance around a fountain in the park which is overflowing. Then they work their way toward the street and do some wet taps. By this time they are soaked to the skin, so Murphy grabs an umbrella from a nearby peanut stand and they tap with this for a covering.

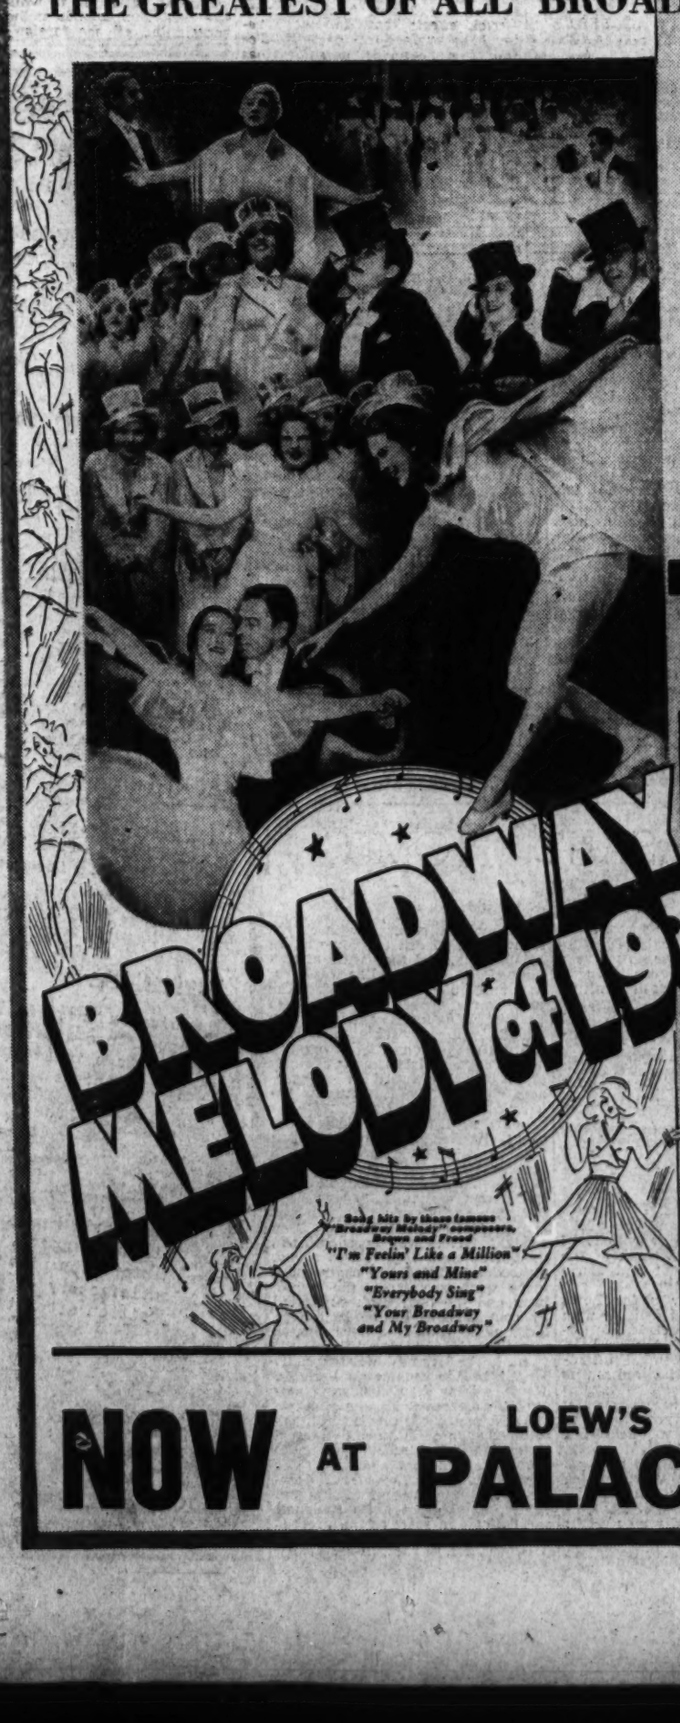

But carrying the umbrella hampers their enthusiastic movements, so they discard it and jump into the puddles again. Finally, the dance ends as they tap their way to the middle of a small lake. Then they dance until submerged.

Garbo Likes Stray Cats, Hates To Dress Up, Rarely Eats Meat

These and Other Traits of Glamorous Scandinavian, Who Will Appear Soon in "Conquest" With Charles Boyer, Are Revealed.

Garbo has long been the subject of many magazine and newspaper stories, plus an untold amount of conversation. Still the Swedish sphynx remains more mysterious than ever and less is known about her than is known about the center of the earth.

Now and then some fact arises from which her friends have compiled a list of "Things I Never Knew About Garbo."

While shooting "Conquest," one of the Loew new season movies, new secrets about Garbo's life were discovered. Here are a few of the little things about Garbo:

She is fond of stray cats, picks them up and takes them to her dressing room where they are fed.

Hates to dress up and laments that she has to make her living by doing so.

At home she relaxes in her oldest and most comfortable clothes.

She drove her car for seven years before purchasing a new one.

She enters the studio via the back gate to avoid the public gaze and leaves by the front gate at night.

Drinks coffee every morning at 10 o'clock.

Walks about two miles before coming to studio to work.

She arises at 6, appears at the studio at 8 and is on the set, all made up, fully costumed and ready to begin on the stroke of 9.

Garbo has moved several times during her sojourn in Hollywood, but rumors point out more houses that Garbo has lived in than she could have occupied had she been six Garbos.

She wears jewelry only when necessary in a scene and her favorite cosmetic when she is away from the studio is cold water.

Loves to take sun baths in her cloistered patio.

Reads newspapers and magazines avidly and is up on all national affairs and modern happenings.

She goes into a scene with a concentration that excludes all else, but, between scenes, cast off the mood and joins the company in games or gossip.

She wears a 6½AA shoe.

In "Conquest" she is seen for the first time with Charles Boyer, who is cast in the role of Napoleon.

Newest Skirts Pencil-Slim With Kick Pleats.

By Ethel Ehlen.

The Post Fashion Editor.

The suit, the backbone of a smart wardrobe for any season of the year, is especially desirable for fall because it is so generally wearable. The diversity of styling and silhouette makes it possible for every woman to find a suit that is especially adaptable to her figure and personal preferences. There are chic two, three and four-piece suits; hip-length and longer; suits of one and bi-color themes; suits lavishly trimmed with fur or velvet and those which are extremely simple and yet smart and sophisticated in a line.

Among the most popular and wearable in the realm of fall and early winter suits are those consisting of a short-jacketed suit and matching or harmonizing topcoat; this may be either untrimmed or simply dripping with fox or other long-haired fur, or Persian lamb. A suit of this type is very practical because the topcoat may be worn with dresses, thus eliminating the purchase of a heavy coat for general daytime wear. Another type of suit much in evidence is the sheer wool frock topped by a basque-like jacket of the same material, or a chunky boxy coat of the same color in a heavier fabric.

Simple or Fur-Trimmed.

The classic two-piece suit is still in the fashion picture; simple and tailored for business, and elaborately fur-trimmed for afternoon, cocktails and informal dining. Some of these fur-adorned versions have huge collars and pockets of such furs as silver fox, red or cross fox, skunk, mink or sable. One interpretation, especially chic and versatile, was equipped with a seven-eighth length cape which buttoned on under the collar and could be worn separately with silk or sheer wool frocks; it was a spicy brown trimmed with red fox. The tuxedo front is a smart revival for below-fingertip-length coats which top two-piece suits; it is usually of self-material, and particularly effective in the lovely soft tweeds.

Skirts of the newest suits are pencil-slim with kick pleats in either front or back, or both; the length varies from 12 to 15 inches from the floor. Shoulder treatments vary from flat effects for two-piece suits, to broadened shoulders for topcoats, especially those which are untrimmed. Sometimes a flat shoulder line is accented by a wide, loose wrist treatment. Topcoats for suits may be either fitted and belted or loose and boxy; both styles are youthful and ultra-smart this season. Collarless jackets are smart and new in tweed suits—this permits of a change of Ascot, or luxurious fur scarf. Patch and slit pockets are numerous on many of the suits; those placed high, near the neckline are the newest.

Black heads the suit color chart, in suits of all types of styling; smooth woolens trimmed with velvet or fur; nubby wool with Persian lamb as the decorative medium; black and white mixtures, fur-trimmed or depending upon clever manipulation of fabric for smart effect. Vying for popularity are the deep soft greens; spicy browns; deep blues; mixtures with blue, green, purple, red, brown or black predominating. Striped tweeds are new and smart, and adapt themselves smartly to exotic yokes, unusual sleeve treatments and the like. Most interesting, are the methods of contrasting colors in suits of the sports type. For instance, a three-piece suit, whose jacket is a mixture of navy and warm brown matching the top coat, and skirt of navy. The accessories, could be both brown and blue—as, a blue hat and shoes, brown gloves and bag.

An outstanding fall suit of black wool (below), with black velvet blouse and trimming, designed by Helen Cookman. Note the smart velvet bands on sides of skirts and interesting treatment in the jacket closing, outlined with velvet bands. A three-piece suit (right), consisting of short-jacketed suit and matching topcoat of black nubby wool, accented with blue fox collar. A narrow silver kid belt and jacket collar piping, add an individual touch to the ensemble.

The short and long in fall suit styling, both smartly in tune with fashion's latest whims and trends.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Aug. 19.

SOCIAL and dramatic note—Miss Miriam Hopkins, eminent blond Thespian whose life line has run from sunny Georgia to Broadway, New York, to Hollywood Boulevard, is temporarily in residence at her Manhattan town house. The old Liz Marbury place, and a beauty, too.

ALICE HUGHES.

Little Miriam, of the roguish blue eyes and invisible lashes, is using her Hollywood reprieve to shop a wardrobe for her next epic and to visit her mamma, Mrs. Ellen D. Hopkins, who lives here. Little Miriam also, if properly approached and cozened, will speak on the now-exhausted subject of the flickered "Gone With the Wind." Perhaps by the time these words totter to press, the leads will have been chosen, but as of today Sis Hopkins says that as far as she is concerned it is no dice at all—that she has no hope of being tapped for the role of Scarlett, and may the best gal win.

For many reasons, Honeychile seemed the logical contender, and many of us would have wagered rather important American folding money that she would get the nod. But I guess not, in spite of the fact that her millions of fans, all paid-up members of the Miriam Hopkins Marching and Barbecue Club, signed enormous petitions and sent them to Davy Selznick, who owns the rights. Right now Miriam tells me she has her heart set on doing a play this fall for our Theater Guild, if she can get permission from her boss, Uncle Sam Goldwyn, the Bald Eagle of Beverly Hills. So with new clothes, a film to do, a play in prospect and her beloved foster-son, Prince Michael, to think about, all is serene and happy, I am pleased to report.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Still speaking of that novel to be movied, Mrs. John Hay (Jock) Whitney, whose husband is Dave Selznick's heavy sugar angel, probably has undergone as many screen tests as anyone in Hollywood's history, and has passed summa cum louder—especially on a horse. This tall, lovely girl, who is an Altemus (what's an Altemus, mother?) screens well, and it is rumored that whenever the films need a lady on a galloping steed, it will turn out to be "Liz" Whitney, as she is known to her chums and the irreverent society chatter-writers . . .

Mrs. Whitney is a gorgeous girl, but I have never felt warmly toward her since the night on the French Line pier when she, rushing to see a chum just as the gangplank was hauled away, came within one of knocking me for a row of customs inspectors. She may be an Altemus and a Whitney, but even we Hugheses have our feelings, and very tender, too . . .

So many helpful books keep tumbling from the presses that life should be no trouble at all. Just read a couple of chapters and make wonderful friends from whom to borrow money, and amass a million dollars by saving tinfoil. Peace—it's wonderful! The latest is "How to Beat the High Cost of Living," by one Mr. Ray Giles, whose tome, out the twenty-fifth, lists no less than 864 money-savers. He offers 150 in the chapter "Your Clothing—Dress Better on Less"—the mere man!

• • • •

Living costs are going up in all branches—ask your butcher. The time has now come for a rousing book on how to get gobs of money while napping in a hammock. If you can write this one, I guarantee that my old classmate, Max Lincoln Schuster, will publish it—and few questions, if any, asked!

Mr. Justice McReynolds of the Supreme Court, who, we have been told, is publicly stern, goaled the ship reporters by beaming and chattering jovially as he sailed for England the other day. The 75-year-old J. made a strong bid for our votes by saying that women are far smarter than men, and he regrets deeply that none would ever marry him! What in tarnation is the matter with you girls, anyway?

Life grows too darned easy, with all the new home helps. A great local house pops out with a mixture of charged water and all the stuff needed for such drinks as Tom Gollinses, Planters' Punches, Sours and so on. Just add ice and a jigger of The Giant Killer, and there's your ready-made dissipation. Made easy!

Baking Scalp Bad for Health, Says Specialist

DON'T bring a sun-baked scalp back from vacation, warns Paul A. Thomas, hair specialist. August is both heat month and also vacation month, Thomas points out, and many persons unaccustomed to the sun's direct days are in danger at this time of getting an overdose of them.

Vacationers who remain indoors most of the year shouldn't try to develop a tropical planter's sunburn in a fortnight, according to Mr. Thomas, as this means a slow baking of the scalp. The sun's rays are particularly damaging between 10 o'clock in the morning and 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Men, says this authority, should be careful not to go without hats during the hot periods of the day. Here are some of the rules he suggests for summer health of the scalp:

On the golf course wear a light, well-ventilated hat.

Occasionally remove the hat, wiping the perspiration from the sweatband and from your forehead. This cools the head, and allows sufficient sunshine to reach the hair and scalp.

When bathing wear a bathing cap, and shampoo the hair after a swim, particularly if the plunge has been in salt water.

Remember that dust is more prevalent during the summer, and select the shampoo primarily for its cleansing qualities.

At no time permit the sunshine to beat directly on wet hair and a soaked scalp.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Oriental Health Ideas.

The wisdom of the east—to that dark and brooding land where teeming masses of mankind lived so long in isolation—many men and women of our western world have always turned time after time, with pathetic faith that during those long centuries when they were uninfluenced by any other thought, the wise men of the East must have evolved a way of life truer and more satisfying than our own. And so we find, although less frequently than formerly, the medical rules for health of the Orient recommended to us.

From New Zealand we are presented with the three requirements of health:

1. A happy and contented mind.
2. Right use of foods.
3. Sensible general habits.

Such simplicity reminds one of the Right Views of Buddha. And I agree that the attainment of these would go far to make for health and happiness. Certainly if you can acquire a happy and contented mind and throw out fear, worry, anxiety, resentment, self-pity, bad temper, pride, greed, jealousy and cruelty you would go a long way toward avoiding the necessity of going to the doctor. If you would simply make up your mind that everybody is fated to have a little ill health it would make for more sanity.

No one can deny that a wholesome diet leads to a sense of well-being. And nowadays more than ever before, when we know the essentials that science has laid down for a balanced diet, it behooves us to follow it.

Exercise (or else self-massage), cleanliness, sunlight on the naked skin, comfortable clothes (never overclothe) and good posture, and fresh air are some of the things Dr. Ulric Williams, of New Zealand, includes in his sensible general habits. (See the Magazine Health Digest, July, 1937.

Girl May Give Party at Home Without Parent

By Margaret Wallace.

IS IT PROPER for a young girl to give a dinner party in her parents' home without either parent present? This question has evidently been a matter of discussion between two Washington mothers and their daughters—one of the mothers writes:

"DEAR MISS WALLACE: My daughter entertained at a dinner for 16 recently. It was in our own home, and while I helped her with the arrangements, I did not appear to greet the guests. My husband and I had a dinner engagement ourselves in the country, and we left before my daughter's guests arrived.

The mother of one of the girl guests telephoned me next morning and said that she would not have allowed her daughter to attend the dinner if she had known that it would be unchaperoned. We keep four servants, all of whom were on duty that night. My young brother, who is of course a young uncle of my daughter, was among the guests.

"This mother also considered it very poor taste for my daughter to place her fiance at one end of the table while she presided at the other end. She said that it looked 'so married.' We returned early and found the young people having a good time dancing. We left them to have a good time while we sat on the terrace. The young people were very well behaved and left at a reasonably early hour. My daughter served cocktails before dinner, but did not have anything else to drink at the dinner."

It is quite proper for a young girl to entertain her friends at dinner in her own home without chaperonage. It is usual for the parents to greet the guests, but it could not be called bad form for them not to do so.

Since the seating arrangements at the dinner have to be arranged with regard to the number of men and women present, it is necessary to seat some man at the opposite end of the table to the hostess. Usually this honor is given to the oldest and most distinguished man, a relative. In this case it was quite proper for the young lady to honor her fiance in that way.

"I never give a party at our house that my mother and father do not attend and remain the entire time. I love my parents and enjoy being with them, but all my friends' parents let them give parties for just the young people. I would not mind my father and mother being in the house or greeting the guests, but they remain all the time.

This, of course, is a question not of propriety but of tact. Few young people feel entirely at ease when the father and mother of their young hosts are present. It would be good form for the parents to greet the guests and then retire to some other part of the house, coming in when refreshments were served. It would also be tactful and proper for the parents to preside at the dinner table and leave the young people to their own devices afterward.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Should I Go Out With Other Boys? Asks Girl of 15 Who Is Tentatively Engaged to Older Man.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl nearly 16, and am in love with a boy 25 years of age. My parents are fond of him. He is making a business trip to Panama and before he left he gave me a diamond ring which I could regard either as an engagement ring, or a gift from a very dear friend. He will be away from six months to two years, and he has asked me to wait for him. He has prospects of a very bright future.

• • • •

I want to finish school before I marry anyone, and that means three year of study yet. I go out with other boys since he has gone, and he knows I do, but I just don't seem to enjoy their company. Do you think I should settle down to waiting for him and devote myself to my studies, paying no attention to other boys? Or should I make an effort to enjoy the near future without him? Sometimes I think I should. Please Advise me. A. D. D.

• • • •

DEAR A. D. D.: How many times must I repeat myself on the subject of whether or not young girls should commit themselves to long, drawn-out engagements or keep free from such entanglements and develop a wholesome range of social contacts? Your type of question seems to be one which teen-age girls never tire of posing. Maybe they like the sound of it. For my part, I'm getting a trifle weary of answering it—always the same way, but, if possible, in order to vary the monotony, with different words and phrases.

• • • •

My advice, invariably, is this: Don't become formally engaged, which means slipping a ring on the proper finger and forswearing affectionate friendships with other boys, until the wedding day has been definitely set, not further than six months or so ahead. And for heaven's sake don't be so foolish as to think of marrying when you haven't even made a head start on your education. You can't be more than a sophomore in high school, and that means you're scarcely out of pigtails and short socks yet.

• • • •

What do you know about housekeeping, marketing, budgeting child care and wifely responsibilities? Don't you know these are all a necessary part of a married woman's equipment? Do you know anything about office work, so that you could support yourself if necessary? That, too, is a part of every modern married woman's stock in trade. She never knows when she may be widowed, or her husband may fall ill, or his job be lost, or his income reduced, so that she has to shoulder 50 per cent or more of the responsibility of keeping the home fires burning.

• • • •

I think you're a little ninny, that's what I think. And I don't know what to think of your parents. Maybe they know you're boy-crazy and figure that the sooner they get you off their hands and into some husband's keeping, the sooner they can draw a free breath. Anyway, they should not have permitted you to accept that diamond ring. They should have told you firmly that marriage talk was out of the question until after you had earned your high school diploma; that it would be time enough to consider accepting the boy's ring when he came back from Panama. As for your regarding it as "a gift from a very dear friend," don't you know that it's very bad form for a girl to accept jewelry from any man except her husband-to-be?

• • • •

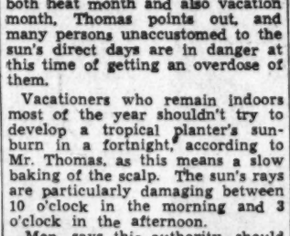

By all means cultivate the friendship of boys your own age, who live in the same neighborhood, go to the same school and belong to your group. If you want to make a wise choice in a husband, you've got to do it on the basis of a wide acquaintanceship and varied social experience with boys and men. You just can't afford to say "yes" to the first marriageable-age man who happens to pay you marked attention. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

TURTLE DDOVES and bow knots reigned in eighteenth century French decoration, for this was a period of femininity even in furniture designs. The types of furniture known as Louis XV and Louis XVI were essentially the reflections of two famous French women of the time, Mme. Pompadour and Marie Antoinette.

The styles popular under Louis XV were curving and delicate with flower baskets and garlands, fastidious garden tools and garden hats, scrolls and shells, musical instruments and cupids as favored motifs on furniture as well as fabrics, rugs and china. Metal inlays, ormolu mounts, painted designs, exquisite carving were the means of achieving decorative effects. Natural woods, painted finishes and gilded surfaces were all used. The cabriolet leg was the distinguishing mark of all Louis XV furniture—sometimes ending in a scroll. Literally no straight structural lines were used. Underbracing was almost never used. The chair backs were broad with carved frames and curved to fit the figure comfortably, and they were always upholstered. The top line was curving and intricately carved. The chair arms curved and flared to permit voluminous skirts to be seated in them. Table tops were of marble or onyx with carved apron legs. Chests and cabinets often bowed outward in exaggerated curves. The furniture is usually quite small in scale.

Louis XVI furniture has a decided charcter of its own, though the rugs and fabrics of this period retained many of the characteristics of Louis XV designs. But now the trend was distinctly toward simplicity, a decline of naturalism and a revival of classic influences. The straight line was predominant, though in chair legs it was round, tapered and fluted. In chair backs there were two types, the square back and the oval back supported by continuations of the back legs. Seats were usually square though sometimes bowed out a little in the front. The frames were usually carved but in symmetrical classic designs rather than in flowing naturalistic forms. Flower baskets and festoons, garden tools and musical instruments continued to be used in fabrics, rugs, etc., but with more symmetry and less abandon. The general mood of Louis XVI decoration continued to be feminine and dainty, though not quite so small and delicate in scale as the preceding period.

Varied Color Schemes Possible for Clever Hostess.

By Rebekah Blake.

WITH the abundant supply of fruits and melons on the local markets summer desserts need not be a harassing problem to the housewife or hostess.

Fruit desserts can be made especially attractive because they lend themselves to varied color schemes. Fruits may be combined for variety and color or used separately for individual flavor.

There need be no monotony of desserts for there are many fruits from which one may choose and numerous recipes to follow. Fruits and melons now on the market include grapes, apples, bananas, limes, lemons, nectarines, peaches, pears, plums, blueberries, blackberries, huckleberries, honeyball, Persian melon, watermelon and a few strawberries.

Peaches are at the height of their season and may be purchased very cheaply. Besides there are many new ways to prepare peaches. One very tempting recipe follows:

Peach Chiffon Pie.

1½ cups fresh peaches
¾ cup sugar
1 tablespoon gelatin
¼ cup cold water
½ cup boiling water
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ cup heavy cream
2 egg whites
½ teaspoon salt

Peel peaches, slice, add sugar and crush fruit. Permit these ingredients to stand for 30 minutes. Soak gelatin in cold water, dissolve in boiling water. Add lemon juice to fruit mixture and fold in dissolved gelatin. Chill this mixture until it is about set. Whip cream until stiff and fold into fruit and cream mixture. Pour into chilled corn flake crumb pie shell. Chill until firm enough to cut. Serve with whipped cream, if desired. Yield: 9-inch pie.

Bananas, apples and plums are also reasonable. A few strawberries are dwindling into the markets from small private patches and are more expensive than the blackberries, huckleberries or blueberries. Persian melon has just entered the markets. Grapes that are beginning to come in will soon be very cheap. Three varieties of grapes may now be obtained—red malaga, seedless and the blue grapes known as "Moore's Early." Grapes are very versatile in that they may be used for decorating a punch bowl (as placing a large bunch on the ice in the bowl), or served cold in bunches for either a dessert or appetizer. They may also be used in tarts, pies and filling for cakes.

One excellent way to combine fruits is in fresh fruit tarts. Any fruit can be used. To make fresh tarts the following recipe is suggested:

Fresh Fruit Tarts.

Eggs, 3 yolks beaten
½ cup granulated sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons flour
1¾ cups milk
2 tablespoons butter
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
8 baked tart sheels
2 cups fresh fruit (sweetened)
½ cup whipped cream

Combine egg yolks, sugar, flour, milk and butter in the top of a double boiler and cook until thick. Cool, and add vanilla. Chill thoroughly. Fill baked tart sheels ½ full. Cover with fresh fruit and top with whipped cream. Serves eight.

For this tart grapes, apples, pears, berries, plums and nectarines may be used for both color and tastefulness.

Blackberries, huckleberries and blueberries may be served either cooked or uncooked. They lend themselves to tarts, cobblers and pies very nicely. If you are tired of the usual pie a blackberry roll would be different and palatable.

Blackberry Roll.

2 cups flour
4 tablespoons baking power
4 tablespoons shortening
1 cup milk
3½ cups blackberries, blueberries or raspberries
¾ cup sugar
1 cup grated American cheese.

Sift dry ingredients. Cut in shortening, then lightly mix in the grated cheese. Add milk to make a dough. The dough must not be very soft, as the cheese softens it while baking. Kneed dough lightly on a floured board, roll to 1-3 inch thickness. Cover with the berries mixed with the sugar. Roll up carefully like a jelly roll. Bake in a moderate oven (375 degrees F.) 40 minutes, or until the pastry is done and lightly done. Blueberries or huckleberries may be substituted for blackberries.

Apple Dumplings.

2 cups soft wheat flour
1 teaspoon salt
½ cup shortening
4 to 6 tablespoons cold water
4 or 5 tart apples
1 cup sugar
1 teaspoon cinnamon
2 tablespoons butter

Sift the flour and salt together; cut or rub the shortening into the flour with the tips of the fingers or a pastry blender; add water, a little at a time, to make a very stiff dough. Do not knead. Roll the dough very thin. Cut in rounds (use medium sized saucer). Pare apples and slice thin. Place in center of each round of pastry. Mix the sugar and cinnamon. Add 1 tablespoon to each dumpling. Moisten edges of pastry, bring together and seal, smooth up in greased baking dish. Prick tops, dot with butter and sprinkle with remaining sugar and cinnamon mixture. Add ½ cup water, cover; and bake in moderate oven (350 degrees F.) 30 minutes. Brown pastry.

'Chunky' Coats for Girls.

New York (AP).—The last word in fur coats for the school girl is the new "chunky" cut, which ends at mid-hip and is cut on straight bulky lines. It is generally made of one of the full-furred pelts as skunk or guanaco (South American llama). Straight coats of kid-skin or squirrel, about 40 inches long, are also smart.

For these delicious fresh fruit tarts topped with whipped cream any of the fresh fruits now on the markets may be used, such as grapes, plums, apples, bananas, peaches, pears, blueberries, huckleberries, and blackberries.

Spicy Fruit Syrups Make Quick Drink

Keep in Ice-Box, Add Water When Ready to Serve.

A tall frosty glass with a long cold drink saves the situation on many a sultry afternoon. To save the time and bother of mixing and fixing every time a drink is called for, many a woman has found it advantageous to keep on hand a spicy home-made fruit syrup which only needs the addition of ice water when a thirst demands quenching. It will keep indefinitely in a covered jar in the refrigerator, ready at a moment's notice to give its comforting coolness to a weather-weary body. Three tablespoons of the syrup, added to a tumbler of water, make a drink that is tasty and refreshing.

Clove-Lemon Syrup.

1 pint water
1½ cups lemon juice
1 teaspoon whole cloves
2 cups sugar

Mix all the ingredients in a saucepan and bring slowly to the boiling point. Boil for 2 minutes, then remove from the stove and cool and strain. Transfer mixture in a covered glass jar and keep in the refrigerator to use as needed. Salad of Meat Is Cool Supper, Yet Substantial

Many Combinations Offered by Great Variety of Ingredients.

SOMETHING cool and yet substantial are the requirements for the Sunday night supper, so why not have a meat salad? This is substantial enough to satisfy the heartiest appetite, and tasty enough to tempt the most lethargic one.

As to the kinds of meat salads suitable for the Sunday night supper, there are many. The meat is finely diced and combined with a variety of other foods. Crisp celery and pickles are ingredients of practically every meat salad. Macaroni, carrots, apples, cucumbers, tomatoes, may be used in various combinations with meat.

Cut Meat Into Cubes.

The meat for a salad should be cut into pieces which are not so small that they lose their identity. For most salads one-fourth to one-half inch cubes of meat are best. And for a meat salad, there should be plenty of meat. Leftover cold roast pork, veal, lamb, or beef are ideal for this dish. Cold baked ham makes an excellent salad as do the ends of a pot-roast. In fact, practically any kind of already cooked meat may be used, so if there are to be guests for the Sunday night supper, perhaps you will want to have a large roast of meat for the Sunday dinner, and make the leftover into salad for the supper.

Here are suggestions for hearty meat salads:

Meat and Macaroni Salad.

3 cups diced meat
2 cups cooked elbow macaroni
½ cup diced celery
½ cup diced sweet pickles
Salt and pepper
Salad dressing
Lettuce or escarole
Stuffed olives

Have meat diced into one-fourth to half-inch cubes. Drain cooked macaroni and wash with cold water to prevent it sticking together. Combine meat, macaroni, diced celery and sweet pickles. Season with salt and pepper and moisten with salad dressing. Serve on a bed of lettuce or escarole and garnish with sliced stuffed olives.

Tomatoes Stuffed With Ham Salad.

5 ripe tomatoes
1 cup cold diced baked ham
¼ cup diced celery
¼ cup diced cucumber
Salad dressing

Choose tomatoes of uniform size. Hollow out the centers. Combine with diced baked ham, celery and cucumber. Moisten with salad dressing. Refill the tomatoes and serve in lettuce cups.

Don't Bruise Berries With Jets of Water

Never allow a strong flow of water to pass through berries to clean them. The water is likely to bruise them. Place them in a colander held under a light stream of water. Or, better yet, lift the colander up and down several times in a pan of cold water. Do not over-wash berries or let them soak too long.

Improvised Ring Mold.

A ring mold may very easily be improvised in an emergency. Place a glass fruit jar in a round bowl. Fill the jar with ice. Pour the gelatin mixture into the remaining space in the bowl. When firm, remove the ice and pour warm (not hot) water into the jar; then remove jar carefully.

Recipe for Parsnips Includes Orange Juice

Butter your parsnips while ye may—you'll like them if you fix them with brown sugar and orange juice (yes, orange juice!). Here's how: Wash and peel about 6 parsnips. Boil in water until tender (about 30 minutes). Drain and cut into lengthwise strips. Place in oiled baking dish. Add ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon paprika and 4 tablespoons butter. Open a can of Florida orange juice; add to it about ½ cup brown sugar. Pour this over parsnips, dot with butter and bake in a moderate oven about 30 minutes.

Evade Chilled Foods.

Be careful not to drink or eat too much cold or chilled food in summer. The stomach naturally becomes chilled if the food is very cold. Digestion is then retarded. Meats, broiled or made into loaves, vegetables served with plain or butter sauces, fruit or vegetable salads with French dressing and simple desserts are appetizing and nutritious.

Toast and Butter Bread When Making Canapes

When making canapes, it is advisable to toast the small bits of bread first and then spread with butter to give flavor as well as to prevent the topping from soaking into the bread. Often canapes can be spread just before serving. Sometimes they are spread in advance, then popped into a moderate oven for a minute to freshen and brown.

Potted Plant Disposal.

Perhaps you haven't much room in your apartment and you like to keep potted plants. Firmly drive a long nail upright into the window sill just outside your window. Then place a potted plant down over the nail, so that the nail protrudes about two inches through the drain hole. This holds the flower pot securely through almost any weather conditions and you don't need to worry about pushing it off the sill when watering it.

D. C. Society Just as Gay 11 Years Ago

Stern Facts, No Whimsy, Faced Reader Across From Editorials.

Mrs. Roosevelt, Justice McReynolds in News Then as Now.

By Elizabeth Ford.

Eleven years ago to the inch, the twentieth of August fell complacently on a Friday also. And Washington society, then as now, was coming here and going there in one mad frenzy of vacation wanderlust.

If you wished to see what your friends looked like, however, as they summered in this place and simmered in that (nothing changes so little as the weather), you were distinctly in for a run of bad luck, for no three-column pictures graced the arid stretches of the social notes. Nor did you have an opportunity to learn that Mrs. So-and-So was charming in crepe de chine or simply ravenous in pink georgette, for such details were sternly blue-penciled by the powers that insisted on being.

Facts, pure and simple, were what you got, and so conveniently, too, for they faced you directly across from the editorial page. Society was serious . . . and you were never allowed to suppose otherwise as you propped it up in front of your cafe au lait in the morning.

Lest you forget . . . the name of Dr. Hans Heinrich Dieckhoff, who was Counselor of the German Embassy and Charge d'Affaires ad interim (in 1926), faced you almost every day for a week in the August society notes of that period. On Thursday, the nineteenth, it was remarked he "returned last evening from a motor trip to New England." A few days later he entertained at a luncheon at the Willard Hotel.

On the twentieth, no less, the Ambassador from Great Britain, Sir Esme Howard was on his way back to Manchester, Mass., after having dedicated a memorial tablet to Virginia Dare at Roanoke Island, N. C. Coincidence?

The blue pencil didn't write on August 21, for a semi-poetic paragraph (the beginning of modern journalism) on the zinnias and the gladioli in the garden of Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Amos A. Fries escaped the copy desk unmaimed. The occasion was an outdoor tea party.

By August 23 (you must remember your date in history), Justice McReynolds, of the Supreme Court, already had reached Hot Springs, Va. And Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, wife of the former Assistant Secretary of the Navy, was the honor guest, with Mr. and Mrs. Henry P. Rogers, at a dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parish at the Breakers at Newport. Oh, yes, Newport was doing right well by itself even in 1926.

A few days later Mrs. Charles Corby was spending some time at Poland Springs, Me., and judging costumes at a masquerade ball. And society editors' typewriters were all in a dither over the fact that the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Wilbur J. Carr were coming home aboard the Olympic after a trip to Europe.

Eleven years from now . . . Sorry, but we only know the past and present. Selah.

Winter to Bring Sequin Gowns

Short Skirts and Very Tall Hats Also on Style Schedule.

Short skirts, "very tall or very crooked" hats, and sequin and braid-hung evening gowns are indicated for the fall and winter season of 1937-1938, according to reports of the Paris openings of world-famed couturiers.

Last week, by boat, train and plane, sharp-eyed buyers piled into the city to attend the official autumn and winter openings of the great dress houses, openings that came so thick and fast that exhausted buyers had scarcely time for more than a foot bath, a glass of tea and a herring between engagements all week long. At the most popular house of all, Schiaparelli, on the Place Vendome, department store executives who had crossed the United States and the Atlantic for no other purpose were glad to perch on a stair rail or the edge of a chromium table to peek at the new models.

One place that knowing buyers wasted no time on was the grandiloquent Pavilion d'Elegance in the Paris Exposition, where frequent public fashion shows are held. Well, they knew that none of the first-class designers was sending any new models to a place that any style pirate or country dressmaker good at copying could walk into free. On the other hand, more United States buyers than at any time since 1929 attended the private shows.

At Rehoboth Beach.

Mrs. William M. Webb left yesterday to join her daughter, Mrs. Henri L. J. de Sibour and the latter's two children, Helene and Henri, jr., at their summer home at Rehoboth Beach. They will remain there until Labor Day and are joined for weekends by Mr. de Sibour.

Heiress Ridicules 'Missing' Reports

Winifred Stoner Says She Knew About Fortune.

New York, Aug. 19 (AP).—Winifred Sackville Stoner, whose whereabouts have been sought through the personal columns, announced through her attorney today that she definitely was not missing and that she knew all about being heiress to an estate. At the same time the attorney, Bernard H. Sandler, declined to say where she was.

It all started when the London solicitors for the estate of the former child prodigy's grandfather, the late Dr. John Sackville, of Highbury Park, Kent, England, sought information as to the whereabouts of Miss Stoner.

ABOUT THE TOWN

With Dudley Harmon.

Anyone who reads the papers knows by this time not only Hugo L. Black's political history, but also his taste in food and neckties as well as other fascinating details dug up by the press since his appointment. But so far Mrs. Black has remained something of a mystery woman, and it took no little ferreting even to discover that she has gone into a temporary shell at the home of Gen. and Mrs. DeWitt of the Army War College.

From her pictures you know that Mrs. Black is a pretty woman with prematurely gray hair which makes her seem older than she actually is. But did you know that she is an economist and a writer besides? Three years ago she finished a full course in economics at George Washington University, in addition to attending to those social duties which, unless she is a hermit, no Senator's wife can avoid.

You may be even more surprised to learn that before coming to Washington, the wife of the man who made his mark crusading for labor was a member of the conservative Birmingham Junior League. Recently she has contributed articles to the magazine published monthly by this organization. A graduate of Sweetbriar College, she continues her studies in English and journalism with courses at American University. No blue stocking, Mrs. Black finds plenty of time to look after her home and three children and to develop her musical talent in piano study.

Who says diplomats are cookie-pushers and tea hounds? Senor Luis Quintanilla, Counselor of the Mexican Embassy, is, besides a diplomat, a teacher of French at George Washington University. In the time that remains, he goes over to Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, where he is studying for his Ph. D.

Like Englishmen and Spaniards, Mexicans have never been exactly famous for speaking French like natives—their accents get in the way—but Quintanilla is an exception. He was born in Paris and learned "le francais tel qu'on le parle" even before getting around to Spanish.

Another scholarly diplomat is Ibrahim Seyfullah, until recently Second Secretary of the Turkish Embassy. He took several courses in international law at G. W. last year. The Ecuadorean Ambassador, Capitan Colon Eloy Alfaro, has taught there and is still on the teaching list, although he hasn't been very active this past year. He is reported to be toying with the idea of taking some of the professors on a jaunt to Ecuador.

The envy of all husbands who have to commute to join the "little woman" over the week-ends in the summer is Lieut. John F. Greenslade. Aide to Admiral Arthur B. Cook here, the lieutenant flies his own plane to Skytop, Pa., where Mrs. Greenslade and the children, Rosemary Prindeville and John Wills, are vacationing at the Skytop Club.

Mrs. Greenslade, who lives in the wintertime at the Wardman Park, is the daughter of Mrs. Paul H. Bastedo, wife of the President's Naval aide, who has recently been appointed commander of the U. S. S. Quincy. Lieut. Greenslade is the son of Rear Admiral John Wills Greenslade, whose engagement to Miss Mary Lee Gallagher, of Washington, was announced earlier in the week. Miss Gallagher is a sister of Mrs. Adolphus Watson, wife of Rear Admiral Watson, of Washington. Is that complicated enough?

Mrs. Olga Latta a Visitor.

Representative and Mrs. Andrew J. May have as their guest, at the Roosevelt Hotel, their daughter, Mrs. Olga Latta, of Prestonburg, Ky. Mrs. Latta will remain until the adjournment of Congress.

At Wardman Park.

Mr. and Mrs. Somers Finish Wedding Tour

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin H. Somers have returned to the city after a wedding trip to Canada. Mrs. Somers was, before her marriage June 30, Miss Patricia Ridsdale. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Percival S. Ridsdale.

Mr. and Mrs. Somers spent several weeks at the Gaspe Peninsula, where they rented a house.

Visit Capital.

Mr. and Mrs. John Santry, of Anawald, W. Va., are in town for several days and while here are at the Wardman Park Hotel.

Diplomat Leaves.

Prince del Drago, Charge d'Affaires of the Italian Embassy, went to New York yesterday. He will return Monday.

Nova Scotia Trip Begun By Gloria Grosvenor

Miss Gloria Grosvenor, who left yesterday to join her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Gilbert H. Grosvenor, at their summer home, Beinn Bhreagh, in Nova Scotia, was accompanied by Miss Beverly Marshall. They will drive to Boston and from there take a boat to St. John's, Canada.

Dr. and Mrs. Grosvenor have been in Nova Scotia for about 10 days.

Dr. Mabel Grosvenor, who has been at Beinn Bhreagh since late July, expects to return to Washington next week. Her sister, Mrs. Paxton Blair, and her three children, who went to Nova Scotia early in the summer, are still there and will remain until early autumn.

Honey Johnson Denies She'll Wed a Mdivani

New York, Aug. 19 (AP).—The question of whose honey is Honey Johnson remained unanswered today when the Bronxville beauty herself returned from Europe.

"Ridiculous," she said when asked about cabled reports that she might marry Prince David, of the marrying Mdivanis. But Jesse Livermore, jr., who also returned in the Conte Di Savoia, said Mdivani had "fallen for her" when he introduced them in Paris.

"Listen," said Honey, "I had several dances with Mdivani, and that's all there is to it."

Mr. and Mrs. Oakes Here.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis Winwood Oakes, of Chester, England, have been in Washington this week at the Mayflower. Mrs. Oakes is the former Louise Peters, of New Jersey.

Opera Harpist Objects To Waste of Training

Mme. Conti, of Metropolitan, Thinks Only Children of Talent Should Be Taught Music; Visits Son in Washington.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Time and money are wasted in teaching music to children who have no natural inclination or talent for it, according to Mme. Amelia Conti, who is here from New York visiting her son, Arnaldo Conti Berenguer. Mme. Conti, solo harpist of the Metropolitan Opera Company and world-renowned in her art, believes, however, in encouraging young musicians and putting good music within reach of all who desire to hear it.

"There is a growing interest in opera among young people today," she said. "The schools are largely responsible for it and the radio has helped to some degree, although many radio programs are deplorable, both as to attempts at music and dialogue. The music appreciation work in the schools is of great value. Young people now talk about opera; they want to know about it, and consider it a subject about which it is as important to be informed as baseball."

Mme. Conti described the audience of school children at a matinee of "Aida" at the Metropolitan last spring as the most attentive and responsive she had ever seen there.

"Throughout the performance, you could have heard a pin drop. No one laughed or talked, or made the slightest disturbance, and when the applause came it was quick and spontaneous. One of the stars, who was called back again and again for encores, had tears in her eyes. She was so impressed by the spontaneity of the children's appreciation. After the final curtain they crowded around the orchestra pit, asking questions about the instruments and begging for autographs."

Should Teach Appreciation First

It is much better, Mme. Conti believes, for children who are not naturally gifted, to learn the love of music through hearing it and then, if they eventually desire to learn to play an instrument, they can study it for their own enjoyment. Forcing little Johnnie and Mary to take music lessons and reluctantly do the scales in which they have not the slightest interest, is not adding a contribution to the art, she asserts. Without a true ear and a sense of rhythm, a child can never be made into a musician.

Mme. Conti lived in Washington for some time and comes here frequently from New York. She expressed the hope that some time the Capital might be the home of a national opera.

Her career perpetuates a distinguished record of artistry dating from the eighteenth century, when her grandfather, Luigi Conti, was clarinet player in the court orchestra of Maria Luisa, wife of Napoleon I. His son, Arnaldo Conti, played in the second clarinet stand. Graduating from the Royal Conservatory in Milan, Arnaldo Conti made his debut as an operatic conductor at the age of 20. Early successes included two seasons at the Italian opera in Paris, where he became intimately acquainted with Jules Massenet and married his protege, Lucie de Ferry. Many seasons in the leading opera houses of Italy, Spain and Portugal, were followed by 20 consecutive seasons of opera in South America with such stars as Tamagno, Caruso, Patti, Maurel, Battistini and Tetrazzini.

Early Training Under Her Father

Mme. Conti, his daughter, at the age of 15, was graduated with highest honors from the Royal Conservatory of Milan. The following year she toured Italy with an orchestra directed by Toscanini, then went to France to play for Saint-Saens, and later to Austria, with Felix Weingartner. At 18, she played with her father on his last two trips to South America.

In 1906 she toured this country with the original San Carlo Opera under the musical direction of her father. Two years later he founded the Boston Opera with such celebrities as Nordica, Nielsen, Constantino, Mardones and De Segurola. After the disbanding of the Boston Opera, Mme. Conti was engaged by Campanini as solo harpist of the Chicago Opera, where she remained for 15 consecutive seasons. This engagement was followed by one season with the St. Louis Symphony and her engagement with the Metropolitan Opera of New York.

8th St. Temple Sisterhood Will Meet in October

Plans Preliminary Session in September; Members on Vacation.

The first Monday in October will mark the opening of the season for the Sisterhood of the Eighth Street Temple, of which Mrs. Frederick Pelzman is president. Many of the officers and members now away from the city on summer vacations will then be back and ready for a busy year.

Mrs. Pelzman is at Asbury Park, N. J., for a few weeks; Mrs. Abram Simon, honorary president, with Rabbi Simon, is spending the summer in Atlantic City; Mrs. David Simon, first vice president, will leave this week-end for her summer home in Ventnor, N. J.; Mrs. Martin Mendelsohn, another vice president, has been in Europe, and Mrs. Morris Cafritz, also a vice president, is spending the summer in Atlantic City, where she and Mr. Cafritz have a house for the season.

Other officers of the sisterhood are Mrs. Benjamin Brill, fourth vice president; Mrs. Max Goodman, treasurer; Mrs. David Bornet, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Martin Baum, recording secretary; Mrs. Albert Mey, financial secretary, and Mrs. Theodore Peyser and Mrs. Jesse Miller, auditors.

A meeting of the board will be held the last Monday in September in preparation for the general meeting the following week. The sisterhood has a session monthly, with a speaker of prominence and a short musical program following its business meeting. Its activities include much philanthropic work, contributions to the Community Chest and to work for the blind, study groups in child training, a lecture course, and other cultural projects. The garden section has had large flower shows on several occasions, the proceeds of which have gone to charity. There are also the annual rummage sales and the annual donor luncheon, which is the sisterhood's chief source of revenue.

The women work closely with the temple, of which Dr. Simon and Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld are the rabbis. Last year they built the new chapel there at a cost of several thousand dollars.

The sisterhood was founded by Mrs. Abram Simon who also founded the National Federation of Temple Sisterhoods and is honorary national president as well as honorary president of the local organization. Other past presidents are Mrs. Fedora Jonas Lewis, Mrs. Morris Cafritz, Mrs. Samuel Pack, Mrs. Alfred Selinger and Mrs. Levi David.

Railroad Diners Now Provided With Hostesses

Vivid in chic uniforms, tall, college-bred and marked by personality-plus, fascinating dining car hostesses on railroads are now launching a new career for women. De luxe trains of key railroads in all parts of the United States are now introducing the hostesses to keep guests quiet, calm and comfortable en route.

The pleasant young women who are graduate nurses and serve as hostesses on United States airlines are a fixed institution of the air and are considered a profitable investment by their employers. United States railroads, long addicted to the colored porter as a factotum, have seen the signs of the times in the sky.

After advertising its needs and interviewing some 300 applicants, New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad last week started training classes in Boston for a handful of young women to act as dining car hostesses on its crack runs, mostly between Boston and Manhattan. Candidates are required to be unmarried, 5 feet 7 inches to 5 feet 10 inches tall, aged 24 to 35, 115 to 135 pounds in weight.

Because Superintendent H. W. Quinlan, of the New Haven's dining cars, believes grace of carriage and movement is important, he insists on modeling experience as well as hostess experience. Candidates must learn correct diction, how to greet incoming diners, how to make menu suggestions, how to keep tab on cooks and waiters. The dining car stewards will be free to spend most of their time in the kitchen.

Six hostesses, having shown so much desirable experience that they were allowed to skip training school, were already at work last week on New Haven dining cars. They work six days a week, and live in women's hotels specified by Superintendent Quinlan at each end of the line.

THE WOMAN'S RELIEF CORPS of the Department of the Potomac will be well represented at the national convention which is to be held in Madison, Wis., September 5 to 11.

Mrs. Mary E. Bowen, department president, will be there, heading the official delegation from here. Others who plan to attend include, Mrs. Delia L. O'Brien, department secretary; Mrs. Bertha B. Brown, department senior vice president, and Miss Mary Howarth, director of junior clubs for the department.

The last three are all members of Burnside Corps, and Mrs. Brown, its president. Mrs. Bowen, belongs to Lincoln Corps, of which she has been treasurer for 19 years. She was a member of the W. R. C. in Wellsboro, Pa., before moving to the Capital and has been a member of the organization here for 30 years.

Her long membership gives her the classification of a Pioneer and this distinction entitles her to attend the luncheon being given especially for the Pioneer members as one of the features of the Madison convention. There are several others with a similar record of membership in the department, among them Mrs. Marian M. Lewis and Mrs. Elizabeth Owen Buchter, now a resident of Baltimore, but both members of the Lincoln Corps.

Mrs. Bowen's mother was a member of the Wellsboro Corps, which has been dissolved since only one or two members remain. Her father served through the Civil War with the Pennsylvania Bucktails.

Cronin Succeed Griff? Not Next Season!

By Shirley Povich.

New York, Aug. 19.

The enterprising New York baseball reporter who went into a session with his dream pipe and then brought forth the story that Joe Cronin would be paid off at Boston and succeed Clark Griffith as president of the Washington Club in 1938 was not entirely incorrect.

POVICH.

I would say that he was merely a bit premature.

Joe Cronin some day will move into the president's office at Griffith Stadium just as surely as the sun will set in the west tonight. That part of the story is unchallenged. But the prediction that the change would take place next season is no less than absurd for a variety of reasons.

In the first place, Cronin, as manager of the Red Sox, is making more money than is his daddy-in-law, Griffith, as president of the Washington club. Cronin's Boston contract, which has two more years to run, calls for a $30,000 annual stipend which is more than Griffith draws as president of the Nats.

* * * *

Griffith, be it known, is not the actual owner of the Washington club. His holdings fall far short of a controling interest. Only because he has the complete confidence of William Richardson, the Philadelphia cement manufacturer who is vice president of the Club, and permits Griffith to vote his stock, does Griffith have control of the Nats.

* * * *

And another thing, Griffith has no immediate intention of stepping down as the president of the club. His life has been so inextricably entwined in baseball that he would not be happy unless he were active in the executive end of the business as long as he is physically able. And there is no evidence, either, that Griffith, at 67, is not physically able to continue.

* * * *

But, a couple of years hence, when Cronin's profitable contract with Yawkey as Boston expires, ah—then it may be another story. By that time, Griffith may honestly feel that the duties of presiding over the destinies of the Washington club with all the fervor he always has put into the job may be too exacting. Then, perhaps, Cronin will step into Griffith chair.

* * * *

But, if not then, Cronin is fated to be the president of the Washington club in the not too distant future when Griffith will surely step down. The Boston manager who led the Nats to a pennant back in 1933 in his maiden effort as a big league pilot, is the protege of Griffith who took him out of the ranks and in the face of league-wide criticism made the young shortstop his manager.

* * * *

They called it "Griffith's folly," "then, but every other club owner was wishing, by the end of the season, that he would stumble on a similar folly. Cronin justified every hope of Griffith and brought the city its first pennant in nine years.

* * * *

There's a deep attachment between the old man and Joe Cronin, Cronin married Griffith's favorite adopted daughter and moved solidly into the family. Very naturally, Griffith and Cronin had a fondness for each other. Baseball is the passion of both. Their baseball does not end with the last out of the ball game. In after game sessions, at dinner and in long evenings at home, father-in-law and son-in-law commune with baseball.

* * * *

Small wonder then, that Cronin is Griffith's choice to succeed him, whenever his son-in-law no longer is obliged to the Boston club by contract. Griffith could not order, even by specification, a successor who so thoroughly meets his requirements as the fellow who married his daughter. It is a natural and Cronin's course has been charted from the day that he married into the family.

* * * *

A dozen years ago, Clark Griffith had another successor in mind—Bucky Harris. Back in those days of 1924 and 1925, when the ambitious young Harris was winning pennants for Washington, Griffith even then was fancying the idea of stepping down some day in favor of a young man. And Harris was his choice. Bucky, in fact, did move into Griffith's office as a sort of vice president of the Washington team.

* * * *

But Griffith was to cool on Bucky. Washington social life beban to absorb more and more of Harris' time and with his failure to repeat his pennant victories, after marrying into society, Harris lost his big "in" with the Nats' owner. He showed little interest in the administration end of the business and long before he moved to Detroit as manager at end of the 1928 season, Harris had moved out of the desk he was occupying in Griffith's office.

Antonio Downs Ribelin In Southpaw Tourney

Chicago, Aug. 19 (AP).—Alexander Antonio, of Linden, N. J., defeated Roy Ribelin, of Dallas, Tex., 4 and 3 today in the quarter-finals of the National Lefthanded Golfers championship at Olympia Fields. Antonio was 3 up after the first 18 holes, but the Texan rallied to square the match at the twenty-seventh. His game fell apart then, however, and the New Jersey shotmaker ended the match with a birdie on the thirty-third.

Matchmaker Says Papers Yet Unsigned

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Cowboy Howard Scott, the lean lightweight with small arms and big ambitions, last light signed to meet champion Lou Ambers in a ten-round nontitle bout at Griffith Stadium. The argument will feature an all-star card being arranged for August 31.

Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn, who has been angling for Ambers' services over a period of weeks, emphatically denied that the match has been made, adding that he expected some word from Al Weil, Ambers' manager and a promoter at Hartford, Conn., early this morning. But a dispatch from Hartford, wired special to The Post, said the match was in.

Lost to Ambers.

Scott lost a nontitle bout to Ambers in Hartford last Monday night, getting up off the floor twice, and carrying the fight to the titleholder. Weil, according to Ahearn, therefore is not anxious to put Ambers back in against Scott on the 31st, inasmuch as Lou will defend his crown against Pedro Montenez the Wednesday previous at Madison Square Garden.

Weil preferred "Irish Johnny" Dean for an opponent, according to Ahearn, but the matchmaker declined to make this match on the grounds that Dean isn't ready for Ambers. Ahearn added that if Ambers makes an appearance here it must be against a good opponent, one who will give the fans a run for the money, and he firmly believes Scott to be the man.

Lou on Card.

Also scheduled to appear on this card are Lou Gevinson and his recent conqueror Joey Archibald; Dean, Baby Manual, and at least two other fighters of better caliber known to the local fistic public.

Scott, while already in good condition, will resume heavy work Monday in preparation for his second scrap with the king of his division. He is confident that the outcome of the second bout will be wholly in his favor.

RANGER WINS AGAIN.

Mattapoisett.—A blinding fog made a mystery of most of today's race among the America's Cup yachts, but when she murk of Newport waters lifted, Ranger stood in her accustomed place, at the head of the fleet.

The Harold S. Vanderbilt yacht won today by the substantial margin of 12 minutes 32 seconds over the 32-mile squadron run of the New York Y. C. Cruise from Newport to this little town.

BUDGE BARELY WINS.

Newport, R. I., Aug. 19 (AP).—The severe slump that has ruined Don Budge's mighty tennis game appeared to be waning today when he led his three closest American rivals, Frank Parker, Bryan (Bitsy) Grant and Bobby Riggs, into the semifinal round of the historic Newport Casino tournament.

Budge, who showed a marked let-down earlier this week when resuming singles play after his brilliant Davis Cup and European campaigns, appeared to be three-quarters out of it when he engaged steady John McDiarmid, the Princeton University instructor, in the quarter-finals.

UNSEEDED PLAYERS WIN.

Pittsburgh.—Two unseeded players wedged themselves into the semifinals as the youthful field of the National Public Parks Tennis Tournament displayed a general disregard yesterday for the rankings of the committee.

Bob Patterson, slender 17-year-old schoolboy of Tulsa, Okla., blasted the No. 2 seeded Mike McLaney, of New Orleans, out of the quarter-finals in four sets, 3—6, 7—5, 6—2, 6—4, and Mrs. Gertrude Dockstader, of Los Angeles, upset Mrs. Jean Arisberger, of Pittsburgh, seeded No. 3, in a second-round match held over from Wednesday because of rain. Her scores were 6—0, 6—4.

Allen, Whitney Steeds Victors at Berryville

Special Dispatch to The Washington Post.

Berryville, Va., Aug. 19.—Clifton Stables of Dr. Lewis M. Allen, of this place, vied today with those of Mrs. John Hay Whitney, of Upperville, for prominence in the opening day of the Berryville horse show. A crowd of 2,000 people attended the inaugural day, which was interrupted this afternoon for an hour by rain.

Clifton Stables sent a seasoned hunter in Clifton's Trump to annex the hunter hack, while Clifton's Chatlain won the three and four-year-old hunter class from a good field. A second, third and fourth here and there completed the triumphs for the Allen aggregation.

The entry of Spring Hope and Nobody's Fool from Llangollen had a top performance in winning the pairs of hunter class. Spring Hope came back in the afternoon and annexed the lightweight hunter event, just nosing out Clifton's Trump. Bon Diable and Two Leggins were other outstanding performers from Mrs. Whitney's stables.

U. S. Randle, of Washington, took care of the handicap jump winning with Randle's Pride, and was fourth in the same event with Randle's Way. The ladies hunter class was won with Hunter's Choice, a two-time champion this year from Mr. and Mrs. George P. Greenhalgh's Springbury Stables. The heavy draft events were about evenly divided with Charles R. Hope, of Purcellville; Ray E. Fields, of Round Hill, and C. E. Norman, of Purcellville, sharing the honors.

Treasury A & D Defeats FAA Nine in Play-off

Treasury A. & D. yesterday defeated Federal Alcoholic Administration, 5-4, to take a 2-1 lead in the five-game play-off series to decide the championship of the Sport Center Baseball League. Home runs played a vital role in the decision with Mike Sklar for the winners, and Monica for the losers driving out round-trippers. Lafferty was the winning pitcher, although the six hits he gave up were two more than Backos allowed.

Spencer Overton's 73 Wins Suburban Invitation Medal

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

A Staff Correspondent.

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 18.—Spencer S. Overton, Rolling Road's bespectacled links star, retained his perfect batting average in Baltimore Invitation tourney qualifying rounds here today, turning in a 73 at Suburban to win the medal and add it to his Five Farms title, won earlier in the season.

Overton's 73 nosed out a pair of Washington competitors by a stroke, Volney Burnett and Billy Dettweiler, who posted 74's, while another pair of District golfers were tied at 75, Harvey Johnson, Columbia, and Ken Lafferty, Indian Spring.

Overton was off to a dismal start, taking a bogey five on the first hole, required five to reach the par three second green, holing out in six, and taking another five on the third hole, but the inventor-golfer rallied here and played the remaining 16 holes in two under par, including a quartet of birdies, for the medal winning score.

Scores of 77 made the first flight, five Baltimoreans playing off for four places, Harris Jones, Otto Greiner, John Huffman and Bill Byrnes making the championship bracket. Eddie Johnston, Forest Park, was one over par on the play-off hole and lost out. Greiner, the Baltimore Country Club Invitation winner, make a spectacular four after driving out of bounds. He was in the play-off only because he hit four balls out of bounds off the first tee in his qualifying round, but still scored a 77.

Ferrell Bows In Great Duel With Ruffing

Nats' Slugger Had Saved Game Inning Before; Stone Hits Homer.

By Shirley Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

Yankee Stadium, New York, N. Y., Aug. 19.—Big Wes Ferrell pitched a winning ball game today and lost—beaten by a brutal break in the luck that endowed the Yankees with a 4-3 victory at the end of the 12 most tense innings in which the Nats have figured this season.

On the very threshold of performing for the third time during the game the feat of choking off the Yankees without a run when they had a man on third base and none out, Ferrell was rudely rebuffed in that twelfth.

The Yankees won and Ferrell lost because Cecil Travis, the fielding hero of the minute before, unloosed a wild throw to first base that Joe Kuhel juggled but couldn't hold.

Back in the eighth inning, the Yanks had the winning run on third with none out and couldn't score. And again in the eleventh they had the winning run on third and couldn't score against Ferrell. And then came the twelfth and once again Ferrell appeared to have beaten 'em off.

He had allowed the Yankees only six hits during those previous 11 innings—had pitched a four-hit game, in fact, before the contest moved into extra innings. And then Red Rolfe led off the twelfth with a single to right. And Joe DiMaggio followed with a two-bagger to left that pushed Rolfe to third.

It appeared to be curtains for Ferrell, but to Gehrig he issued a deliberate pass. And then in Ferrell's moment of need, Travis came to his rescue. He leaped high for Bill Dickey's line drive, snatched it with his gloved hand, and converted it into a double play with a throw to first. Ferrell, with two out, appeared safely over the hump.

But he then purposely passed the dangerous Henrich to fill the bases. It looked like strategy gone awry when Tony Lazzeri worked him for a count of three balls and one strike. But the pitch that might have forced the winning run over the plate, was a beautiful called strike and it was 3 and 2. Still in the same hole and forced to get the next pitch over, Ferrell got it over and Lazzeri hit a tame grounder to Travis. And then—horrors!

The throw that should have been a routine affair for Travis was wide of Kuhel's reach at first base. The ball struck the toe of Kuhel's glove, popped into the air again, fell to the ground and Lazzeri was safe on first as Rolfe crossed the plate with the winning run.

It was a stirring duel between Ferrell and big Red Ruffing. The Nats outhit the Yankees, 10 to 8, but like Ferrell, Ruffing was supreme in the clutches and Washington absorbed its fourth straight defeat of the series.

The Nats wrung two runs out of Ruffing right off the bat—or, rather, after two were out in the first inning. Cecil Travis walked and then Johnny Stone banged a vicious line drive into the rightfield bleachers for a home run.

It wasn't entirely Ferrell's fault that the Yanks wiped out that 2-0 deficit and barged into a 3-2 lead in the third inning. The Yanks scored those three runs on one legitimate hit, one cheap hit and one damaging error by Joe Kuhel.

Ruffing himself launched the inning with a clean single to center. Crosetti drew a walk and Kuhel made a grievious muff of Rolfe's meek grounder toward first, Ruffing scoring and Crosetti reaching third. But the Yanks were knee-deep in good fortune. DiMaggio took a full swing and dribbled a ball a dozen feet in front of the plate so slow that Wes Ferrel could make no play, and Crosetti scored while Rolfe reached third. Rolfe came home while Gehrig was in the act of hitting into a double play.

The Nats got a break and tied the score at 3 to 3 in the fifth. Rick Ferrell bashed a low line drive toward left center and Jake Powell was charged with a two-base muff when he dropped the ball after a long run. Then Brother Wes stepped to the plate, delivered a crisp single to center and the game was tied.

Up, down, up, down. That's the way it went for the Yankees for six straight innings after the third as Ferrell out there on the pitching mound stood them on their ears, to coin a phrase. The loose-jointed right-hander was no less than sensational as he took the hardest hitting club in baseball and disposed of 'em without a hit from the third until the tenth.

Even the 5,463 hostile Yankee fans were won over by Ferrell's performance, and in the eighth inning they actually broke down and cheered the enemy pitcher when he looked a stark, damaging three-base error and the Yankees in the face and pitched himself out of a horrible hole.

That was when Buddy Myer, Mel Almada and Johnny Stone trifled with Joe DiMaggio's short pop fly to centerfield that led off the inning. None of 'em seemed willing to make what was an easy catch for either Myer or Almada, but eventually Johnny Stone dashed in for a try and then fumbled the ball. DiMaggio took three bases on the muff and with none out and the scored tied, the game apparently belonged to the Yankees.

League Leaders Put Fray on Ice in 9th; Pitcher Bowman Injured.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, Aug. 19.—The Chicago Cubs got out the skid chains today in time to prevent a rout in their three-game series with Pittsburgh, winning the final contest, 7 to 3.

The triumph, while the New York Giants were losing, gave Chicago a lead of three games in the close National League race.

Joe Bowman, starting Pirate hurler, was injured in the first inning as he knocked down a fiery liner off Billy Herman's bat. The ball struck his pitching hand, stoving three fingers and forcing him to leave the mound.

New York Nine Upsets Washington, 6-5, in Union Printer Tourney

Locals Aid Loss With 4 Miscues

Rally in Second Clinches Contest; Chicago, Baltimore Advance.

By Jack Munhall.

Washington seriously jeopardized its chances of capturing its thirteenth annual title since 1908 yesterday when New York, aided by spotty fielding, defeated the locals, 6-5, and took undisputed possession of first place in the twenty-seventh annual International Union Printer Baseball Tournament which enters the semifinals here today.

The old "13 jinx" never seemed more devastating than yesterday as Washington kicked in with four damaging errors that accounted for two unearned runs and its third defeat by the same score in as many years at the hands of the Gothamites.

In other games yesterday, Chicago and Baltimore joined Washington and New York in the semifinals, winning from Cincinnati, 9-5, and St. Louis, 8-2, respectively.

New York, with four consecutive victories, can clinch the championship today in its game with Chicago at 11 a. m. at Griffith Stadium. However, Washington which meets Baltimore, for the first time since the league was organized, at 2 p. m. in the Stadium could still tie Chicago for the title if the Windy City boys drop New York while it wins from Baltimore.

Chicago, defending champion, whose lone defeat in the tournament was unfortunately recorded on its forfeit loss for use of an ineligible after beating St. Louis handily in the opening game, would occasion no surprise sinking the haughty Gothamites, for the two are apparently evenly matched both on paper and on the basis of series performance.

The first clash between Washington and Baltimore promises to be the beginning of a heated rivalry between the two neighboring cities, as a large consort of Maryland rooters has wired headquarters here that they will be on hand. The admission to both games will be free.

Yesterday's loss to New York was a tough dose for Washington in general and Charley Bray and George Mosedale in particular/ to stomach, for the two held the winners to seven scattered hits, while Washington mustered 11. But four errors, one by Bray himself, contributed two unearned runs, which proved more than sufficient.

Phil Boundford, local short-top, continued his sensational batting, securing two hits, as did Ed Edwards. Mosedale worked a remarkable relief stretch, allowing the winners but four hits in his six and two-thirds innings on the mound.

POSTERITY was quickest to begin, met determined opposition from MULTIMILLION, disposed of him and hard ridden, was never seriously threatened. SAINT PIERRE, unable to keep pace early, swung to the outside in the stretch, and responding gamely to intermittent punishment, was along in the closing stride. LEGION, restrained while in pursuit of the pace, took command when called upon and held on gamely, just failing to last.

DAILY DOUBLE, POSTERITY AND SAINT PIERRE, PAID $682.40.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—STEELWORKER, $11.20, $5.30, $4.20; NIGRETTE, $4.70, $3.70; SAXLEN, $10.00.

STEELWORKER was never far from the pace, moved up on the outside when called upon, wore down NIGRETTE for the lead in the stretch and drew out steadily in the last furlong. NIGRETTE drew away into a good lead in the early stages and made a determined attempt to go along with the winner when challenged, but was not good enough and barely lasted to stave off the bid of SAXLEN. The latter, greatly benefited when the leaders went wide at the stretch turn, closed willingly on the inside through the stretch run.

MIGHTILY followed along in close attendance of the pace established by DEEP END, moved up on the outside when reaching the stretch and wearing down the pacemaker in the last 70 yards, drew clear in the last stride. DEEP END opened up a good lead in the first quarter mile, was rated along in front and only succumbed to the bid of the winner in the closing stages.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,200; allowances. For 3-year-olds. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:17. Off 4:22½. Winner, Dixiana Stable's ch. f. SHOOTIN' HIGH, never far from the lead, moved up stoutly when called upon, took command from SUPERWICK and held the latter safe to the end. SUPERWICK had speed from the start, drew clear in the run down the backstretch, fought it out gamely when challenged, but was not good enough.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:50. Off 4:52½. Winner, H. Kerr's ch. g. Selections at Narragnasett Park.

Dear Al:

Pompoon, the colt that might have won a Kentucky Derby and a Preakness except for the fact that he competed in the same year as War Amiral, is being shipped to the Three Cousins Farm at Hyde, Md., where he will be groomed for stud service. Pompoon, second to War Admiral in both of the 1937 turf classics, hasn't been right since he was knocked out in the Belmont Stakes. He appears to be sound, according to Owner Jerry Lochheim, but just refuses to extend himself in races. Pompoon was one of the choices for the Derby in the winter books, following his winning of the 2-year-old championship in 1936. During his career, Pompoon started 14 times, winning seven races and finishing second in four. He earned $100,510 during his brief career. John A. Manfuso, owner of Ancroid, has decided to give his son of The Porter a good rest before sending him back into action. Aneroid had much more trouble in the Massachusetts Hadicap than the chart reveals. He will resume his racing career at Havre de Grace next month. Manfuso intends to campaign him through the Maryland season. BILL.

First race—Flickering, tossed in here with 104 pounds, appears to have an excellent chance of taking down the major award. Needs only the right handling by Marrero. Be Just and Jolly to beat the others to the wire.

Second race—Memory Chair, despite an apprentice rider, gets the call in the juvenile sprint. Has worked well, and I can't see anything to beat this one. Loleet, with only 99 pounds to carry, seems headed for a high money position. Lovick to take care of the remainder of the field.

Third race—Room Service has been improving and is ready to graduate from the maiden class. Has some good races to recommend. Clematis is speedy and probably will hold Cottage Cheese safe for the place money.

Fourth race—Mansco appears to have a slight edge in a rather close field. May knows how to ride this one and he probably will lead Black Highbrow and Bay Bubble to the wire.

Fifth race—Bubblesome has seldom been better than his recent form. He is the likely favorite in this field and the likely winner. Buck Langhorne has been coming back gradually and is dangerous. Chancing for the show cash.

Sixth race—Leonard Wilson has an excellent chance of taking down a set of brackets in this field. The veteran is fit and ready for a test of this kind. Chief Yeoman and Sallandry to fill the other money positions.

Seventh race—Bright Bird meets only mediocre company in this field. Breaks off the rail and may make every post a winning one. Sciva and Chilhee promise to do the chief chasing.

Eighth race—Blind Brook earns his pay in fields of this caliber. Figures to lead the pack home. Xandra and St. Moritz are fairly reliable and are dangerous.

Best Bet—Memory Chair.

Post Notes on FISHING

The shoal of blues running the beach under Cove Point are striking as sparingly as those in other sections. One catch has been made out of it. Last Monday evening one of Capt. Harry Woodburn's boats got into them for 18, all of snapper size but 4, which weighed close to two pounds.

By Bill Ackerman.

A local angler caught a 62½ pound channel bass off the old Coast Guard Station just north of Wachapraque early in June. Without the least hestitation we made the remark that this fish would in all probability be tops for this season. How they do cross you up—George Renneman, of Manhasset, Long Island, caught in the surf of Assateague Island a channel bass that weighed 63 pounds, 30¾ inches in girth and 54¼ inches long.

ACKERMAN

Surf fishing along this stretch of beach, Ocean City to Rehoboth, has been off for several weeks, the best of the catches being from one to three or four bass of a few pounds each. Where the big fellow came from is probably a fooler for even the angler that caught him.

Post Notes has made many contacts between anglers and marlin boatmen during the past month. Has insisted on reservations being made just as far in advance as possible and for the party to be there exactly at the time agreed upon.

Now we are called upon to note the flagrant passing over of a party that had made their reservation nine days in advance, made the long trip down and were unable to get a boat anywhere and had to spend the better part of two days doing everything but that for which they had bargained, because this captain, who on occasion has been rated as the dean of all Ocean City offshort fishermen, failed to keep the faith.

It is hoped this bad practice will cease, so this really great fishing will go on as it has started, and particularly so that other captains will not suffer from it.

From Reedville, Va., comes a byproduct of the fisheries called herring oil. It is extracted form the alewife, the fish that brings to our bay section each summer the hordes of bluefish.

This oil can partially take the place of fresh alewives for chumming and save anglers a great deal of trouble in transporting bushels of messy bait.

Many use it by merely making a small hole in the can and placing it so it will drip overboard. Others soak a piece of waste in the oil and then put it in a can with several holes and sink it to the bottom or to any depth up to a foot or two below the surface. It makes a really fine slick, with an effectiveness approached by only one or two of the prepared chums, but don't forget that a small amount of the fresh-ground chum must be used to hold the fish after they follow up the oil slick.

Ollie Atlas expects to have it in stock this week in sealed containers as small as quarts. The price at Reedville is close to $1 a gallon in 5-gallon containers; so from that you can approximate the cost here. But however much it is, if it will make fishing possible when chum is scarce and it will be worth its cost.

In the fishing contest now open to anglers angling in Chesapeake or Potomac waters above Tangier Island it was necesary, due to the existing Maryland law, to permit a calculation of the weight of large rockfish so that they might be released instead of bringing them to town to be weighed, as it is necessary to do with bluefish and squeteague. So many calls have come in asking how it is possible to weigh a fish by calculation of given girth and length that we are noting it now. Set it down if you think you will not remember this simple formula that has come into widespread use in Florida waters, where the releasing of big fish has become as much a part of the sport as has the catching.

Take the greatest girth in inches—square it and multiply by the length in inches—divide by 800—the answer is the weight of the fish in pounds.

Fishing Contest Rules

Tackle may be any size rod and reel, hook or line.

Any kind of artificial or natural bait or lure.

Must be caught in Chesapeake Bay or Potomac River above Tangier Island or any tributary of either.

Entry blanks must be signed by captain or guide if there is one. Entries may be weighed and entered at any sports store participating in the contest.

There will be weekly prizes for the largest bluefish, the largest striped bass and the largest weakfish (sea-trout) gray or speckled.

(In taking striped bass of a weight beyond that allowed by Maryland law, weight calculation based on length and girth measurements will be accepted if attested by two witnesses.)

Awards will be made each week following the one in which the fish were caught.

In case of a tie there will be duplicate awards. Decisions of judges are final.

March Beats Bill Turner In Juniors

Tom Wadden Defeated; Desher Beats Harriet Williams.

By Bob Garrison.

Diminutive Freddie McNair, of Annapolis, short of stature but long on tennis ability, added the District Boys' tennis championship to his Maryland State championship yesterday by defeating Tommy Wadden, who would make two of the 80-pound Annapolis youngster, in a lengthy well-played three-set match on the Army-Navy Country Club courts, 3—6, 6—4, 6—3.

Slightly more than 4 feet tall, the 15-year-old son of a retired naval officer, in winning the District championship was defeating Wadden, Western High School net captain, who stands nearly 6 feet tall, for the second time this year in as many matches. He had previously won the Maryland title from Wadden earlier in the summer in straight sets.

At the same time smooth-stroking, accurate Charlotte Decker, Wilson Teachers College student, was winning the girls championship with as little trouble as she, seeded No. 1, had encountered in the entire tournament, by defeating pretty Harriet Williams unseeded entry, who had reached the finals by upsetting Hazel "Jimmy" Bishopp, Playground tournament finalist, in the semifinals, 6—1, 6—2.

Play in the junior division of the cavalcade of juvenile tennis sponsored by the District of Columbia Tennis Association, saw Hammering Harry March blast his way into the final round by defeating Billy Turner, North Carolina junior champion, in straight sets, 6—4, 6—1.

Riding on the crest of his sudden improvement which has brought his game its potential greatness, March, playground instructor, gave his doubles partner a sound lacing, as Turner, who seemed to be paying more attention to his whistling than the match, played spotty tennis, far below his usual standard. March meets top seeded Davie Johnsen, at 11 a. m. today, for the Junior Singles crown.

McNair, who looks as though he should be home playing with blocks, partrayed his part as a giant killer with all the finesse of a Davis Cup star. A clever tactician, who fights the hardest when the score is against him, McNair volleyed well, and used a well-trained backhand to handle Wadden's smashes masterfully, scoring many passing placements in the corners.

The bespectacled Miss Decker completely outclassed her smaller opponent in every department of the game. Miss Williams was rendered helpless as she saw her retrieving game ripped apart by carefulyl planned shots off her opponent's racquet.

Miss Decker held leads of 2-0 in the first set and 4-0 in the final, sparing her Wilson High School foe one game before running out the first set and dropping but two games in the second set before winning it.

In the junior doubles tournament, Davie Johnsen and his partner, the heralded Marvin Carlock, junior champion of Utah and Colorado, gained the final round by eliminating the Michael Nunez-Doyal Royal team, 6—3, 7—5, for the right to meet Turner and March for the crown at 3 p. m. today.

The possibility of the Johnsen family winning both doubles championships was created when Ruth Johnsen, Davie's younger sister, gained the final round of the girls' doubles play when she teamed with Dorothy Barclay to eliminate Margot Mink and Molly Thompson, Playground champion, in three sets, 6—3, 4—6, 6—3. The Johnsen-Barclay team meets Charlotte Decker and Margaret Duffy, the Nos. 1 and 2 seeded singles players, for the title at 1 p. m.

Ernie Dusek Wins Wrestling Feature

Working a little longer than the prescribed union limit, Ernie Dusek pinned Abie Coleman after 47½ minutes of feverish uaboring last night at Griffith Stadium in the feature of the weekly wrestling program. A missing Kangaroo kick was Coleman's undoing, for Dusek hopped on him after this tactical error, and finished the match.

Bees Check Giants With 2-1 Victory

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Aug. 19.—The Bees stopped the New York Giants' dash toward the National League lead today by squeezing out a 2 to 1 decision in 11 innings, behind the all-but airtight pitching of their "old man" rookie, Jim Turner.

The defeat, which was pinned on the Giants, when Hal Warstler and Elbie Fletcher singled and Bob Reis drove in the winning run with a pinch-fly, ended the New Yorkers' five-game winning streak. Coupled with the league-leading Cubs' victory over Pittsburgh, the setback dropped the Giants three-games off the pace.

Tigers Win 12-4 Victory Over Chisox

Game Halted by Rain in Sixth; Victors Get 4 Home Runs.

Chicago, Aug. 19 (AP).—A heavy storm stopped a rain of Detroit Tiger base hits today, but not in time to save the Chicago White Sox from a six-inning 12-to-4 defeat in what was to have been the first game of a double-header.

The drenching ended the contest during the last half of the seventh and caused postponement of the second joust.

During six legal innings the Tigers pounded John Whitehead and Sugar Cain for 15 hits, 4 of them home runs, 2 each by Gerald Walker and Rudy York. The Tigers scored three more runs in the seventh off Johnny Rigney, but they didn't count since the Sox were unable to complete their half of the inning.

Tommy Bridges won his eleventh victory of the season, holding the Sox to eight hits, five of which occurred in the second when the Sox counted all four of their runs.

'Yoo Hoo' Act Is Big Moment Of Lotus Bill

Specialties Flung Thick and Fast at Popular Night Spot.

By Chanticleer

The Parisian Cocktails have cooked up a novelty kidding number called "Yoo Hoo In Yours Eyes" for the big moment in the floor offering at the perenially favorite Lotus. In contrast there is a rather naughty little French "Can Can" number and a bit called "Indians on Broadway."

With Bill Strickland and his Capitolians and that old showman, Al Norton, in charge of the festivities, there's never a dull moment. Specialties are flung about thick and fast by the Kinneys, Jack and Betty, in a "Slumming on Park Avenue" number and a Pasa Dobles two-step; Edna Murphy, a jazz toe expert; Marion Dawn, singing with Bill and his men, and Beatrice Churan, in a "Slave Dance."

Some one remarked the other night at the Madrillon that the loaf of bread and the jug, as immortalized by Omar, the poet fellow, were certainly in abundance these days at this cool rendezvous and all that remained for any young gentleman seeking complete relaxation and relief from the day's temperatures was the "thou."

Say what you will, there's a tempo and a rhythm to your favorite afterdarkerie, and if you want something brand new for your cycle of night-stepping, just drop in at Jimmy Crandall's southeast gathering spot—Brinkley's. It's different. You can't miss.

Last Saturday night some of the late arrivals were turned away (alas and alack) at the Nightingale. Just a friendly little warning: Be on the early side this week. Watson Powell and orchestra for your dancing.

Navigator Jimmy Byrd, that's what they call him. Meaning that Host Byrd is the fellow who officially gets you straightened out on your chartography at the Mayfair. Those murals still command the attention of the Mayfair's new guests. Jack Campbell, Leo Lisee and Beverly Stull entertain, afternoons and evenings.

You can laugh off these hot evenings and satisfy your taste for chicken all in one movement by hieing down to Boulevard Farms, a short stretch below Alexandria, on the Mount Vernon highway. Quite cool, thar over the river in the pines. Tain't far. George Washington used to do it regularly on horseback.

They really have imagination, those genial folk at the Ambassador's Hi Hat. Latest story: A Virginia country gentleman recently was saved from heat prostration by the quick wit of a passerby who propelled the V. C., into the Hi Hat for one of its inimitable juleps!

The Bob Eugene Troupe, now thrilling the Terrace diners with high-flying trapeze work right over Barnee's head, doesn't take its work too seriously. Plenty of comedy in this top-ranking cricus act. Grandpa even swings by his long gray beard.

Each contestant is already a winner.

MR. AND MRS. FIN PETRIE.

Prize-Winning Journalist From Wyoming Village and His Wife View the Capital's Sights From Air.

"Wonder what Opal would look like from the air," was the comment of Fin Petrie, prize-winning rural journalist from the tiny Wyoming village after a tour over Washington in the Goodyear blimp yesterday.

Both he and his wife agreed that their home town with its population of 40 wouldn't look like much. And besides, the strange aircraft would probably cause cattle stampedes for miles around, they decided.

Mr. and Mrs. Petrie are veteran fliers by now, having come from New York by plane. It was their first experience in a lighter-than-air ship, however. They prefer this method of travel, finding it more restful. "I was sort of worried about that lobster I ate last night," Petrie said afterward, "but it didn't cause any trouble at all."

As the blimp floated them over the city, he seemed impressed most of all by the neat pattern of circles and intersecting streets. "Looks just like a toy village," in his opinion. The sight of automobiles parked on top of buildings was a new one to him.

He suggested that it would be convenient if the blimp were to land on the lawn of the Capitol. Representative Paul R. Greever, of Wyoming, was going to show them around the House and Senate later in the day, and Petrie figured they could save taxi fare by letting the blimp deliver them.

"Only 1,000 feet up?" he said to the pilot, Commander Karl L. Lange. "You'd have to go about 6,000 more before you were as high as you can get in Opal with both feet on the ground."

Mr. and Mrs. Petrie were accompanied by Richard Chaplin, of the Crowell Publishing Co., whose Country Home Magazine awarded Petrie a cash prize and a trip around the country for his weekly column of Opal news in the Kemmerer (Wyo.) Gazette.

James E. Shea, 42, War Veteran, Dies

James E. Shea, 42, lifelong resident of Washington and employe of the Department of Commerce for many years, died unexpectedly after a heart attack yesterday at his home, 524 Oneida place northwest.

Mr. Shea served in the Navy during the World War, and entered the Department of Commerce shortly after the war. He was a member of Fort Stevens Post of the American Legion, of Holy Name Society of the Church of the Nativity, and the Manresa Club.

Mrs. Dorothy Shea, his wife, three children, Virginia, Elizabeth and James E. Shea, jr., and two sisters, Mrs. Bessie Mangan and Mrs. Marguerite Henley, all of Washington, survive.

Funeral services will be held at his home at 8:30 a. m. tomorrow, followed by requiem mass at 9 in the Church of the Nativity. Burial will be in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Soviet Executes 34 as Tokyo Spies

Moscow, Aug. 19 (U.P.).—Thirty-four alleged Japanese spies and members of the "Trotskyist-Bukharinist Anti-Soviet Terrorist organization" were reported tonight to have been executed in Irkutsk, Siberia, bringing the total executions in the Far East to more than 400.

The condemned acted under direct instructions of the Japanese secret service and were engaged in espionage and wrecking activities on the Eastern Siberian Railway, besides ploting the assassinations of government and party leaders, according to the August 14 issue of the Eastern Siberian Pravda, published at Irkutsk.

Dr. Bowman to Discuss Wildflowers of Capital

Dr. Paul Bowman, head of the biology department of George Washington University, will discuss wild flowers which thrive along the trails in the Capital tonight at 8 o'clock at another meeting of the campfire program at Pierce Mill in Rock Creek Park. He will illustrate with colored slides.

Duce's Son Air Favorite.

Istres, France, Aug. 19 (A.P.).—Bruno, the son of Italian Premier Benito Mussolini, and other Italian military fliers were strong favorites tonight to win most of the 3,000,000-franc (about $112,000) prize money for the Istres-Damascus-Paris air race starting tomorrow night.

T. F. Stepper Dies; Retired D. C. Aide.

Thomas F. Stepper, 60, employe of the District Building for more than 35 years before his retirement, died yesterday at Emergency Hospital. He had been ill for the past month.

Mr. Stepper, whose home was at 220 South Carolina avenue southeast, was a lifelong resident of Washington. He leaves his wife, Mrs. Mary Stepper; a brother, James Stepper; a twin sister, Mrs. Marion Skinner, and four other sisters, Mrs. Agnes Javins, Mrs. Barbara Licarione, Mrs. A. A. Lithgow and Mrs. Elizabeth Lehmann, all of Washington.

Funeral services will be held at the home at 8:30 a. m. Monday, followed by mass at 9 in St. Dominic's Church. Burial will be in Congressional Cemetery.

Insurance Survey May Cut Fire Rate

A survey of fire insurance rates in the city with a view of lowering them will begin soon, according to J. Balch Moor, superintendent of insurance.

A rate expert will be appointed, Moor said yesterday.

4-Month-Old Baby Dies; Police Are Investigating

Phyllis McIver, 4-month-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Duncan McIver, of 2018 Portner place northwest, died late last night either from strangulation or suffocation, Emergency Hospital ambulance doctors said.

Police were investigating the death this morning.

D.C. Health Chief Announces Drive On Quack Doctors

Dr. George Ruhland, District health officer, yesterday announced a drive on medical quackery. He said the department had lately received complaints against "healers."

Ruhland said voodoo doctors practice here among the colored citizenry, and cited one instance of a "medicine man" who sold charmed briar roots. This voodoo man was mobbed by his patients, Ruhland said, and fled the city.

Ruhland sounded a warning to "correspondence school" doctors who receive a diploma after a few weeks' study. He said criminal prosecutions under the Healing Arts Practice act would be invoked.

Camp Letts Fete To Have Fire Dive

Diving through flaming gasoline and fancy aquaplane demonstrations will feature a water carnival at 7:45 p. m. Sunday at Camp Letts, Y. M. C. A. boys' camp on the Rhode River near Annapolis, Md.

A camp counselor will perform the dive through the flaming fluid. Skits and other stunts will round out the program. John Hain, waterfront director, will be in charge. Approximately 30 boys and counselors will participate.

Anatole France's medieval satire, "The Man Who Married a Dumb Wife," will be presented Tuesday by the F. B. I. Theater Group at the Sylvan Theater, under auspices of the Community Center Department and the Office of National Capital Parks. J. Francis Buckley, new chairman of the players' governing board, will direct.

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart.

Oral Pact

The U. F. W. A., in a recent press release, touched on an "agreement" that was reached between Local No. 10 and the Social Security Board. Frank Bane, S. B. B. executive director, when asked about the agreement said—in fact emphasized—that it was not of a written nature and the Local officials said that Bane was right. And then they began groping for a synonym for the word "agreement."

This was because the President has said that there can be no collective bargaining as that term is understood generally in business and industry. The Local officials finally settled on the term "Statement of Policy," and appended is what the S. S. B. statement of policy amounted to:

"Every employe has the right to see the description of his job, on the basis of which he is classified—every employe has the right to appeal for a higher classification. He shall first discuss the matter with his supervisor, and then appeal, either through the supervisor or without his approval to the classification section directly, for a higher classification—reclassification surveys are to be made at least once a year—all new positions and vacancies occurring within the Social Security Board, by the understanding with the U. F. W. A. Local No. 10, are to be filled hereafter by promotions from within the department wherever possible."

Unusual Motorist

If the active U. D. R. A. ever forms a motor club, one of its most enthusiastic members would probably be Walter I. Swanton, an engineer in the Bureau of Reclamation. And this because Swanton is a rapid traveler and a man who drives his auto to the highest mountain elevations.

He left the Denver office of Reclamation last fall and made a great circle, passing through the States of Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada and New Mexico—5,000 miles in less than three weeks. These ten States are where Reclamation has its greatest irrigation and power-plant projects. Swanton was after a record, wanted to see how many he could visit in the shortest length of time. He leaves for a tour of the White Mountains and the Adirondacks late this month. He hopes to ascend the heights of Mount Katahdin, in Baxter State Park, Maine, and Mount Washington, in New Hampshire.

Swanton, like all engineers, has a propensity for facts, figures and exactitude. He is compiler of a Guide to United States Government Publications (Government Printing Office, 1918).

The auditions in the Government employe "Quest for Talent" contest came to a close last night and on next Thursday evening the finals will be held in the Wardman Park Hotel. A final winner will be selected from the six audition victors and he (or she) will be given an all-expense trip to New York City and afforded an audition in the N. B. C. studios there.

Events Next Week

On Sunday, the Farm Credit Club members make a tour of the historic places in the vicinity of Charlottesville, Va. . . . They intend visiting "Monticello," "Ash Lawn" and the University . . . The cars will travel on the Skyline Drive on the way down into Virginia . . .

On Monday evening, the Public Works Recreational Association members and friends will go on a moonlight cruise down the Potomac aboard the Wilson Line steamer City of Washington . . . There will be dancing and other entertainment . . .

On Tuesday evening, the F. B. I. Theater Group, popularly known as the G-Men, will present the old French farce, "The Man Who Married a Dumb Wife," in the National Sylvan Theater at the Washington Monument . . . The United States Army Band will appear for the only time this season in the Sylvan Theater.

On Thursday evening, plans will be discussed for the bowling league sponsored by the National Federation of Federal Employes . . . The meeting will be held at 7:30 o'clock at the federation rooms on Fourteenth street northwest . . . All interested members of the federation are requestd to attend.

CCC Notes

The religious tone runs heavily through the CCC camps . . . Attendance at services trebled during the last three years, according to a report of the chief of chaplains . . . In 1934, attendance was 3,740,777 at 65,533 services; in 1935, it jumped to 6,761,596 at 110,423 services, and in 1936 it almost doubled again, to 11,156,568 men attending 178,315 meetings . . .

Men who attempt to leave camp and receive honorable discharge on trumped-up claims of having secured jobs on the outside will be clamped down on, recent War Department orders indicate . . . An enrolleee must, before being granted leave to accept employment, show evidence that he has been offered employment . . . His employer must inform the company commander that the man has been employed by him; the selection agency must report that the man has obtained the job, showing that there has been no fraud aimed at gaining an honorable discharge through connivance with an alleged employer . . . The company commander then must communicate with both the employer and the selection agency, finally, pinning down the facts . . . Which would would seem to make a pretty airtight thing of it.

FCA Notes

Appointments: Ann Cohn, of Brooklyn, N. Y., comes to the finance and research division, tabulating unit . . . Leonard F. Schenkel, of New Brunswick, N. J., comes to the credit union section . . . those interested in forming a swimming team to compete in Government interdepartmental swimming meets, should contact Abraham Zweibel, extension 170 . . . If enough persons are available to form a team, the FCA Club will sponsor swimming as one of its activities . . .

Just what the Doctor Advises . . .

for Teen Age Lads; Regular Outdoor Activity in Out-of-School Hours

IF doctor were to prescribe a health-building program for your teen age son, his advice would probably be this: "Get an out-door job for your out-of-school hours—something that will give you daily exercise in the fresh air and sunshine all year 'round; that will require regular habits, keep your mind alert; provide wholesome companions and able supervision."

That's exactly what a boy does when he becomes a carrier-salesman for this newspaper—engages in daily outdoor activity that will give him a strong body and trained mind—stores up physical and mental vigor that will pay big dividends in adult years.

But there's much more to it than healthful exercise! He earns money in pleasant work . . . builds a savings account . . . wins worthwhile extra rewards . . . enjoys carrier meetings and special events . . . obtains practical training in salesmanship and business methods . . . gets a better start toward success in whatever life-work lies ahead.

Is it any wonder that our carrier staff is such a happy group of red-blooded boys, or that so many of these intelligent, well-trained lads will occupy positions of leadership a few years hence?

Wheat Prices Topple With Heavy Receipts

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 19.—Wheat values collapsed 4⅛ cents a bushel in Chicago today, and reached a new bottom price record for the season.

Greatly enlarged arrivals of domestic spring wheat northwest, more than triple the quantity a year ago, together with assertions that European importers are turning to Russia for supplies, did much to put the market under pressure. September wheat led the downturn here, dropping to $1.06⅞, where it was off 23 cents from the season's high recorded a little more than a month ago.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were 2⅞-3⅞ cents under yesterday's finish; September, $1.07-$1.07¼; December, $1.09-$1.09⅛; May, $1.11-1.11⅛; Corn, 1⅛-1⅞ down; September, 98-98⅛; December, 65⅛-66; May, 66⅞-67; oats, unchanged to ⅜ off; December, 29¼, and rye showing ½ to 1 cent setback; December, 77½. The provisions outcome was 12 to 30 cents tumble.

Loans for the corresponding week a year ago totaled $936,000,00.

Excess Reserve $40,000,000 Higher in Week

Gold Stocks Up 30 Million to 12,527 Billion, a New Peak.

By the Associated Press.

Excess reserves of member banks in the Federal Reserve System increased $40,000,000 to $780,000,000 during the week ended August 18. The weekly Federal Reserve Board report last evening showed that the upturn in lendable funds was due to a reduction in Treasury deposits with Federal Reserve banks.

Treasury deposits declined $97,000,000, indicating that part of this sum was released into channels of business and trade, flowing thence into commercial banks.

This factor, however, was offset in part by an $18,000,000 increase in money in circulation to $6,500,000,000. When money in circulation increases, it indicates an outflow of funds from banks.

The increase in excess reserves for the week ended August 18 followed a $40,000,000 increase in the previous week.

The board reported its holdings of Government securities remained unchanged during the week ended August 18 at $2,526,000,000. Gold stocks rose $30,000,000 to a new $12,527,000,000 peak.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively
A Special Correspondent.

All Groups Slip Downward in Dull Trading; U. S. Bonds Yield; Wheat Breaks.

New York, Aug. 19.—Selling was the rule for all financial markets. September wheat closed 3¾ cents down at $1.07 a bushel. The Government bond list sagged badly. Stocks dropped 1 to 3 points, with a slightly firmer tone in the last hour. Sales volume was around 750,000 shares, the largest of the week. Foreign markets also were upset by the wars in the Orient, and declines spread to international stocks.

Price movements were fairly wide at times in some stocks which were pressed for sale and which found no nearby bids for any but small amounts. Reluctance to enter the market at this time, in spite of the prevailing Wall Street view that over the next several years prices will creep higher, is easy to understand in the light of new hints on Presidential policy, of the threatened setback to world trade made by the fighting in China, the approaching financial difficulties of some European countries, and the disorder on Capitol Hill at Washington.

Until the markets find out just what debris the present session of Congress will wash up, when the next session will be held and what is most likely to take place then, they will not be able to shake off their hesitancy. It was not in stocks that the most pessimism was apparent. Japanese bonds had another quick shoot to lower prices, those issues having given up about 30 points in the last three or four days, one of the quickest retreats in the history of the bond market.

Slump Is Checked In Japanese Bonds

New York, Aug. 19 (AP).—A drastic slump in Japanese loans on the stock exchange since the outbreak of heavy fighting in the Shanghai area was checked today after further sharp losses had been recorded. A rally in late trading cut down losses which at one time in the session ranged to more than $80 for $1,000 face value among loans of the Japanese government, city of Tokyo and public utility concerns.

Bond Outlook.

Selling of the Japanese issues was for obvious reasons. It was less clear why the pressure continued upon the Government bond list, but tentative explanations are easy enough to find. One of the latest is the rumor that the Treasury, in addition to refunding some maturities at next tax date, will borrow a great deal of new money, probably $400,000,000. At the same time the banks with large Government bond holdings are hopeful that commercial loan demands upon them will increase this autumn, and they are preparing for the event by securing cash while the market is yet good. Some expectation of a higher shade in money rates also is entertained, and on top and at the bottom of everything are the Government's obscure fiscal policy, monetary policy and other "objectives."

Steel common gave the market its cue in the early trading when it dropped 2½ points before finding support at the lowest price in nearly three weeks. Copper and silver shares were about as weak as the steels, and the slightly inflationary tinge of a few days ago could nowhere be seen, although it should have been. Bethlehem dropped below par. Anaconda and Kennecott gave up a point. Rubber, oil, rail equipment, motor and mail order groups were let down a point or more. Chrysler, General Motors, Montgomery Ward, Sears Roebuck, Standard Oil, Goodrich and American Brake Shoe were prominent in the selling.

Champagne.

The papers were full of interesting news yesterday, some of it from Roanoke Island, where President Roosevelt quoted Macaulay, and some of it from the south of France, where the flower festivals were held and the champagne, it seems, flowed freely, although at times poorly directed, from carriages rolling down the streets; and some of it from elsewhere. Wall street saw in the following selection from Macaulay chosen by Roosevelt a hint that he is not yet through hazing capitalism, stirring up the "underprivileged" against those with plenty of money to spend, to wit: ". . . on one side is a statesman preaching patience, respect for vested rights . . . on the other is a demagogue ranting about the tyranny of capitalists . . . and asking why anybody should be permitted to drink champagne and to ride in a carriage while thousands of honest folk are in want of necessities . . ." Wine is a mocker, the Good Book says.

Margins.

Stock Exchange strictures on the handling of credit by the Federal Reserve Board and its protest against the burden of SEC regulations, claiming that both were killing the stock market, seem to have created no more stir around headquarters in Washington than they did among the banks in Wall street. According to one high banking authority banks carrying stock exchange collateral loans have been doing no worrying. The banks aren't making much from the brokerage loan business anyhow, with call rate at 1 per cent. A much larger profit is being made by the brokerage houses which charge customers on debit balances 2 to 4 per cent more than the rate brokers pay for the loans. Anything that will cut further into trading volume will reduce brokerage revenue from loans.

Unconcern.

A canvass of the leading banks uncovers general unconcern with the present state of solidity, as opposed to liquidity, in the stock market. Bankers' views are in fair harmony. They think that margin regulations have swept up a good deal of in and out trading in stocks, but the effect of the high margins, they believe, is small in comparison with that coming from the general lack of confidence among traders and investors alike in stock profits, in taxation, and in the Government's social schemes. Once business men regain their confidence, the view in most responsible financial quarters here is that the stock market would soon enjoy a considerable increase in activity. In that case stock liquidity would take care of itself. Other circumstances being what they are, many persons think that complete removal of trading restrictions clamped on by the SEC and a lowering of margin requirements would help little, if indeed such acts did not reduce trading further.

Boardroom Sweepings.

In one investment banking firm the guess is risked that the B. M. T. will pass its dividend at the next meeting . . . The stock exchange has one stock of 10 cents par value—Sunshine Mining. Another is now applying for admission. A short time ago a company applied for the listing of its stock having a par value of one mill. That seemed to be a bit small. The listing was refused . . . One Wall street observer said he thought President Roosevelt's Virginia Dare speech on Macaulay yesterday, in which he repeated his old platform of class against class, with emphasis on those categories having the greatest number of votes, did more to destroy liquidity of markets today than any SEC or Federal Reserve Board regulation ever has done.

Bank Clearings Continue Gain Over Last Year

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 19.—In comparison with the total for the week previous and that of last year, settlements through the banks during the latest period moved higher, Dun & Bradstreet reported today.

The amount was swelled by middle-of-the-month payments, which were included in both the current week-end a year ago. The total for 22 leading cities in the United States for the week ended Wednesday was $5,322,241,000, against $4,990,029,000 for the similar period in 1936, a gain of 6.7 per cent, marking the fourth consecutive rise from the 1936 total. This contrasted with an increase of 5.9 per cent in the similar comparison a week earlier.

The turnover at New York went to $3,046,804,000 from $2,887,236,000 in 1936, a gain of 5.5 per cent. The amount at outside centers aggregated $2,275,437,000, or a percentage rise of 8.2 in comparison with the $2,102,793,000 on record a year ago.

Clearings increased $254,996,000 over the total in the week previous. Between the two comparative weeks in 1936, the rise was only $204,258,000.

Fairfax County Acts to Protect Its Wild Life

U. S. Scientist to Speak at Conservation Mass Meeting Tonight.

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST, P. O. BOX 245, Fairfax, Va. Phone Falls Church 832-F-21.

H. B. Derr, Fairfax County agricultural agent, has arranged for a meeting in the courthouse at Fairfax tonight at 8 o'clock to discuss conservation of wild life.

The speaker will be Dr. Leo Couch, of the Department of Agriculture. A motion picture on wild life will be shown. It is planned to organize a wild life club in the county.

The 200th anniversary of the first rectorship of Truro Parish will be observed Sunday in Pohick Church, on the Washington-Richmond highway south of Alexandria. The services will be conducted by the Rev. C. A. Langston, rector.

The church was formed in 1732 and in 1737 the Rev. Charles Green was installed as its first rector.

A lawn party for the benefit of the improvement fund of Fairfax M. E. Church South will be held this evening at the home of Mrs. James Fox on the Lee highway, a mile east of Fairfax.

Superintendent of Schools Wilbert T. Woodson assured citizens of the Sydenstricker community that the county school board would reopen the one-room school at Sydenstricker this coming term, provided patrons could assure an average attendance of 20 pupils.

AirBoardFinds Motor Failure KilledMcChord

Engine Trouble Caused Crackup in Rough Field Investigators Report.

Engine trouble and a landing on a rough field were the causes of the airplane crash Wednesday in which Col. William C. McChord, operations chief of the Army Air Corps, and Staff Sergt. Michael J. O'Connell were killed, investigators said.

Funeral services for the fliers will be held today in Arlington Cemetery. Services for O'Connell will be held at the grave at noon, with Chaplain Ora J. Cohee officiating. An honor guard from Bolling Field will be present.

Services will be held for Col. McChord at the Fort Myer Chapel at 2 p. m.

Capt. A. M. Turner, one of the three officers who are conducting the inquiry, said the crash was caused by engine trouble. The ship, en route from Bolling Field to Atlanta, crashed and burned when the fliers attempted to make a "dead stick" landing in a pasture at the Virginia Industrial School for Boys.

Coroner J. E. Tilman, of Powhatan County, concurred in the cause of the accident. Dr. Tilman was called for a preliminary investigation on instructions from Capt. H. R. Baxter, operations officer at Bolling Field.

At the direction of Capt. Turner, the motor was removed from the plane, and will be brought to Bolling Field for mechanical investigation.

Gordon Rudd, acting superintendant of the school, said after the accident the "plane burst into flames as it struck within 100 yards of the dairy barn, where several boys were at work."

Col. McChord lived at the Mayflower Hotel. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Florence R. McChord. Sergt. O'Connell is survived by his wife, Mrs. Anna May O'Connell, and a daughter. They live near Alexandria.

Honorary pallbearers for Col. McChord will be: Brig. Gen. A. W. Robins, Brig. Gen. H. H. Arnold, Col. C. T. Harris, jr., Col. L. D. Booth, Col. J. B. Rose, and Col. J. A. O'Connor.

Bob Burns Says—

The reason I moved out in the country my nerves were beginnin' to get frayed and ragged like other people in the city. You'd never see 'em like that down home.

Grandpaw Snazzy was drivin' a load of hay down a narrow road one day and he met his neighbor, Knut Strupe, comin' from the other direction on another load of hay. Neither one of 'em would back up to let the other one by. Finally Knut says, "Well, I'm prepared to stay here as long as you do" and he took out a newspaper and started to read very calmly.

Grandpaw Snazzy filled his pipe and lit it and he sat there smokin' for about an hour and finally he looked up and says, "Knut, would'ja mind lettin' me have the paper when you're through readin' it?"

Arlington Joins National Fight On Racketeers

Chamber to Obtain Data Exposing Fraudulent Business Schemes.

Carol F. Winchester, business manager of the Arlington County Chamber of Commerce, announced that arrangements have been made with the National Better Business Bureau, Inc., to receive bulletins covering investigation of alleged rackets and other schemes to dupe business and home owners.

The special committee consisting of A. L. Kelley, chairman; William P. Ames and George M. Yeatman recently appointed to prepare a booklet showing progress made in the county and containing the names of all members under proper classification met yesterday and submitted its draft to the business manager.

Winchester said an effort will be made during the rest of the month to increase the membership further as only those names listed as of August 31 will appear in the booklet.

Paul D. Brown, member of the June graduating class at Washington Lee High School, has been awarded a four-year scholarship at Washington Lee University. Brown was a four-year honor student. He was president of the student body.

Plans are being made for a track and field meet under the auspices of the Arlington County Playground Association conducted at Washington-Lee High School Thursday, W. A. Richardson, supervisor, announced.

Events will be open to children attending the playgrounds regardless of age. A trophy will be awarded the school showing the highest score. Other trophies won during the summer also will be awarded.

An 11-year-old blind boy will be sent to the institution for the blind at Staunton, Va., as a result of an appropriation of $50 by the Arlington County Lions Club. The club plans to give a dinner dance at the Army-Navy Country Club August 31.

New Plea Planned By Edith Maxwell

Staunton, Va., Aug. 19 (AP).—Counsel for Edith Maxwell, former Wise County school teacher, will ask the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals here next month to set aside her second conviction for the slaying of her father, Trigg Maxwell, in 1935.

H. H. Wayt, clerk of the appeals tribunal here, said the case was docketed for argument in the fall session, opening September 14.

Miss Maxwell has been battling for permanent freedom ever since she and her mother, Mrs. Ann Maxwell, were arrested and indicted more than two years ago.

Md. Horsemen Enter Tourney At Piscataway

The second in a series of southern Maryland tournaments will be held tomorrow at Picataway, Md., in Prince Georges County.

Cast in the roles of medieval knights, the contestants will tilt for the honor of naming a queen of the tournament and also for cash prizes of $20, $10, $5 and $3.

The queen will be selected from among four aides. They are Miss Hilda Blandford, Piscataway; Miss Ophelia Dent, Accokeek; Mrs. Lorraine Taylor, Silesia, and Mrs. Alice Ferguson, Accokeek.

Russell Padgett, Allentown, will be chief marshal. Assisting him to announce the various "knights" as they enter the lists will be Clinton Baden and Raphael Parker, both of Piscataway.

Lansdale C. Sasscer, president of the Maryland Senate, will be orator for the evening. John S. White, Delegate to the State Legislature, will speak in the afternoon.

The third in the series of jousting events will be held August 28 at Accokeek. The final tourney will be staged at Oxon Hill on Labor Day. The annual Marshall Hall tournament Wednesday was the first in the series.

The student-aid program of the National Youth Administration will continue in Maryland for another scholastic year, but on a smaller basis, it was announced yesterday by Fyland N. Dempster, State Director of the N. Y. A.

The amounts allocated to the various schools, Dempster revealed, would be reduced in 1937-38 to 75 per cent of the 1936-37 total. The quotas for each participating institution will be based on 8 per cent of their 1936 enrollment instead of 12 per cent of their 1934 enrollment, Dempster said.

A clergymen's conference on the rural church will be held at the University of Maryland September 13-15, it was announced yesterday by Dr. T. B. Symons, director of the Extension Service, sponsor.

A refreshment stand will be operated by the Ladies Auxiliary of the department. Charles Kerr is general chairman in charge of arrangements.

Price Increase Mixed Blessing To Milk Sellers

Demand Lower, Production Greater After 4-Cent-Per-Gallon Boost.

Milk producers serving the local market through the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association are not profiting from the 4-cent-per-gallon price increase as much as they expected, it was revealed yesterday.

Because of a reduction in demand following the establishment of the 14-cent quart last November, farmers receive only 2½ cents per gallon more than before, according to Consumers' Counsel Donald E. Montgomery, of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

Washingtonians drank 365,000 gallons less class A milk during the first six months of 1937 than they did during the same period a year ago, Montgomery says. At the same time farmers produced 602,000 gallons more than they did in 1936. As a result, the amount of surplus milk is much larger this year, and surplus milk brings only about 15 cents a gallon.

Local consumption of milk, which averaged 54,750 gallons a day from January through June, 1936, amounted to only 53,000 gallons a day this year, said Montgomery.

Poor Tomato Season In Somerset County

Princess Anne, Md., Aug 19 (AP).—Somerset County's worst tomato season since 1893 drew to an unlamented close this week.

Growers were dogged with bad weather, labor troubles, and the lowest prices since the panic of 1893. Tomatoes which brought $90 a ton the beginning of the season dropped to $3 a ton. Hundreds of acres were left to rot on the vines because the fruit did not sell for enough to pay the pickers.

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 19 (AP).—Appointment of six deputy district governors for Virginia was announced yesterday by Ellis Loveless, Norfolk, governor of District 24, Lions International. Gov. Loveless said he would have his first meeting with the deputies in Richmond, August 25.

Dr. V. H. Pence, of Pennington Gap, will head zone 1 including Bristol, Pennington Gap and Wytheville. L. J. Giles, Clifton Forge, will be in charge of zone 2 including Roanoke, Vinton, Rocky Mount, Blacksburg, Clifton Forge, Fearisburg and Salem.

Holzworth Case Delayed Despite Reporter's Plea

They postponed the John M. Holzworth case again yesterday, but a Post reporter made an impassioned speech anyhow.

Airing of "disorderly conduct and parading with a banner" charges against the Washington attorney was delayed until next Wednesday at the request of Assistant United States District Attorney McLaughlin, who said some of his witnesses, U. S. Capitol police, could not attend.

Edward T. Folliard, Post reporter who witnessed Holzworth's argument with police on the Capitol steps, told Judge John P. McMahon he was on his vacation, he had been waiting in the court all day, and could he please testify then.

Judge McMahon said no, but promised Folliard could do his talking quickly next Wednesday.

Tax Refund Ordered.

Richmond, Va., Aug. 19 (AP).—A refund of $1,995.13 in taxes levied on the Virginia Health and Accident Association was ordered to be made today by the State Corporation Commission in an order holding the taxes had been improperly collected.
